Francis Edward Bache, the genius of a highly-gifted Birmingham family, died, in his twenty-fifth year, on August 24, 1858. What more natural, then, that the fiftieth anniversary of that sad event should have been commemorated at the Cathedral, Birmingham, on Sunday evening, August 24 last? The music performed on that occasion, included the following pieces, Mr. Royle Shore presiding at the organ, in the absence of Mr. Edwin Stephenson, organist of the cathedral:

Organ solo, Andante con moto in A minor.

Litany, for solo voice and organ:

'Father of Mercies, O take pity on me, Christ, O Saviour, O give to me Thine aid, Holy Spirit, O shed Thy light on me. Amen.'

The words and music were written and composed by him on his death-bed on August 17, 1858, seven days before he passed away. Privately reprinted in 1904.

Romance in B flat, for pianoforte and violin, or violoncello.

Composed about 1856, and arranged for the organ by Dr. W. J. Westbrook.

Psalm 122.

From Montgomery's 'Songs of Zion,' 1822. Com-posed about 1851, and published in 1908. To be sung by choir and congregation.

Introduction and Allegro, for organ.

EMMANUEL COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

Dr. E. W. Naylor, organist of the College, has contributed to the Emmanuel College Magazine (vol. xvii., No. 2, and vol. xviii., No. 1) two interesting articles on the old and new organs in the Chapel. The first instrument was built by Father Smith between 1680 and 1686 at a cost of £140. Commoner of the College. In this connection a College account-book, under date April 22, 1686, contains the following payment: 'Entertaining Mr. Hothersall and his Lady Joice at dinner who gave the organ—£02. 03. 04' and 'wine then—£01. 06. 00.'

Father Smith's organ was used for service until 1812.

For many years the duties of organist and 'repairer' of the instrument seem to have been discharged by the same person. During the first half of the last century the organ appears to buring the list han of the last century the organ appears to have been 'only used now and then, on great occasions, when Mr. Pratt, of King's, was engaged to play.' After the death of Mr. Pratt (in 1855) it was entirely disused—unplayable,' in fact—until the year 1871, when Messrs. Hill & Son restored and enlarged the instrument. The new organ—the opening of which is recorded in our issue of March last—is by Messrs. Norman & Beard.

Dr. Naylor states that the original case 'will be replaced exactly as before, so that the general appearance of the new organ of 1907 will be very much the same as it was in Mr. Hothersall's time.' This is eminently satisfactory.

AN OLD CITY ORGAN.

The Daily Telegraph of September 10, furnishes the following information in regard to the organs in the ancient church which stands under the shadow of the Tower of London:

'The famous organ in the Church of All Hallows', Barking, from the steeple of which the immortal Pepys, who was at that time clerk to the Navy Board, was a pained spectator of the Great Fire, is being rebuilt after passing through many vicissitudes, and the work is expected to be completed by Easter next. The instrument was erected in 1675 by Thomas and Renatus Harris. Its case, which contains some beautiful carvings of "Time" and "Death," by Grinling Gibbons, is to be allowed to remain, and as many as possible of the old features of interest are also being preserved. In 1720, and again nearly a century later, the fine old organ was greatly improved, and in 1872 it was considerably enlarged. Two years afterwards it was partially destroyed by fire, and by some means, during the restoration of the church which followed, it became exposed to the damp, with the result that during service one evening last year it completely broke down, and has never been used since. The first organ in this historic church was built by Anthony Duddynton, in 1519, but all traces of it have disappeared, although the original indenture is still preserved. The cost of reconstruction will be $f_{i,000}$.

CENTENARY ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. W. G. Whittaker, organist of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, South Shields, intends to commemorate the two centenaries due next year—the death of Haydn and the birth of Mendelssohn—by introducing compositions by those two masters in his fourteenth and fifteenth series of monthly organ recitals during 1909. Haydn will, of course, be represented by arrangements from his symphonies and quartets, and Mendelssohn by his six sonatas and three preludes and fugues for the organ.

Mr. Whittaker's programmes are always interesting, eclectic, and well selected, ancient and modern composers being well represented, special attention being given to the choral preludes of Bach. One evening is to be devoted entirely to the works of the great Cantor, concerning whom Mr. Whittaker says: 'The constant appearance of the name of Bach on the programme of these recitals is due to an earnest desire to spread an appreciation of his works. Only prolonged acquaintance with, and intimate knowledge of the glorious creations of the master can cause their true value and supreme beauty to be recognized; it is therefore hoped that past and present non-appreciation of their greatness will not deter members of the congregation from taking every opportunity of listening to them.

BRIXTON ORGAN RECITALS.

During the past three seasons organ recitals by celebrated soloists have been given at Brixton Independent Church on alternate Monday evenings, at which the audiences have averaged nearly 1,000 persons. In consequence of the continued interest displayed in the recitals, a further series, the fifth, will be given during the coming season by the following recitalists: Dr. Alcock, Mr. Goss-Custard, Mr. Hann, Mr. E. H. Lemare, and Mr. C. W. Perkins. The organ is one of four manuals and forty-five speaking stops. Originally built by Willis in 1870, it was enlarged by Lewis in 1901, and by Messrs. Norman & Beard, by whom it was also reconstructed, in 1905. Further particulars will be found in our advertisement columns.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Souvenir de printemps. Pianoforte solo. By Joseph Holbrooke.

Springtime. Graceful dance. By Theodore S. Holland. Silhouette. Pianoforte solo. By Mary C. Benedict.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The repertory of original pianoforte duets is somewhat limited, therefore the three books by Mr. Wickenhausser, containing twelve dance melodies, will doubtless be welcomed in many homes, for the music is easy to read and the dances present pleasing variety of sentiment. Tastes will doubtless differ with regard to the individual attractiveness of these pieces, but attention may be drawn to several. In Book i., the first and second dances are extremely graceful and richly harmonized. In Book ii. the first dance, in its fiery exuberance, has a touch of the Hungarian style, and the succeeding number, in canon, is very effective; while the eighth dance is delightfully dainty, and concludes the book auspiciously.

The concluding volume (Book iii.) commences with a dance in minuet measure, which is well calculated to please both old and young. No. 10 calls for more or less energetic treatment, but ends pianissimo. The concluding measure will require a little more practice than those preceding it, which however will be repaid by the richness of harmonic effects and the general brilliance of the writing.

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke is a fine pianist to whom executive difficulties have no terrors, but his 'Souvenir de printemps' is of simple character and is as graceful as a snowdrop and bright as a crocus, just the piece to cultivate significance in young players. Mr. Holland's idea of Spring is more elaborate, but the music is by no means difficult to interpret. Its principal theme is graceful, and is well contrasted by other subjects and varied treatment. The 'Silhouette' by Mary C. Benedict is a vivacious piece of attractive qualities. It requires nimble fingers, but contains no difficulties beyond the abilities of fairly well-trained pianists.

A Cyclopadic Dictionary of Music. By Ralph Dunstan. [J. Curwen & Sons, Ltd.]

In turning over the pages (nearly 500, closely printed in double columns) of this volume, one cannot fail to acknowledge the industry of the compiler, Dr. Dunstan. He says that it 'has occupied four years in preparation,' and that it 'embodies the results of over thirty years' study and experience.' To quote further from the Preface, the book aims at providing, in compact form, a reliable, comprehensive, and up-to-date compendium of musical information —a condensed musical library for the musician of limited means, and for the general reader.' So far, so good.

But what about the reliability of the information therein set forth? We may again refer to the Preface for an answer to this all-important question: 'The greatest care has been taken to ensure accuracy, and all the proofs have been carefully revised at least a dozen times. Such a statement naturally invites confidence in this 'Cyclopædic Dictionary of Music' as a 'reliable' book of reference. A few dippings here and there into the volume have, unfortunately, revealed certain inaccuracies which considerably discount the trustworthiness of the information so profusely given. Take, for instance, three entries on the subject of 'hymns.' We are told that 'Watts introduced hymns, but they were not established till about 1860. Under the heading 'Adaptation of Hymns and Tunes' we read: 'The haphazard way in which tunes are often adapted to hymns at the last moment before going into the service is very distressing to all earnest-minded people.' This may have been very true fifty years ago in Nonconformist churches, but the statement is anything but 'up-to-date' now that the fixed-tune system is adopted by all denomina-And it is hardly in accordance with fact to say that 'The Salvation Army use the old florid tunes almost exclusively,' as most of their music is anything but 'old.'

Matters of common knowledge are curiously mis-stated, or under-stated: e.g., that Mendelssohn 'entered' the Berlin Singakademie as an alto,' as if that were a teaching institution; and there is no mention that Dr. Richter has conducted at Manchester for the past eleven years. The spelling of well-known names like Clarke-Whitfeld and Streatfeild needs correction, while an eminent French composer has been canonised as 'St. Saëns'!

Some of the statements are rather startling. For example, under 'Accent' we learn that '"The energy of beginning" generally gives an accent to the initial note of a rhythm'! And in regard to style, the following statement, sub voce 'Caroline Unger,' might have been better expressed: 'At the first performance of the Choral Symphony, turned Beethoven round "to show him the applause." (Beethoven, who conducted, was then stone-deaf.)' The addition of the word 'she' before the word 'turned' would have made the sentence clearer. One cannot help regretting a lack of patriotic feeling in the article 'Military Band.' Of its fifteen lines, five—not very illuminating—are given to a description of English bands, while the remaining ten lines are devoted to the constitution of 'The fine military band of the New York 22nd Regiment.' Doubtless this American band is a fine organization, but the same space would have been quite as well, if not better, occupied in giving a list of instruments used in our own splendid Grenadier Guards Band.

In conclusion, this Cyclopædic Dictionary, with all the good intentions and industry of the compiler, is tinged with a certain amateurishness which militates against its acceptance as a satisfactory book of reference, and its scrappy nature is rather aggravating. At the same time, the volume is one that, after undergoing a thorough overhauling and the replacing of some of the extraneous matter by other information that is lacking—periodicals devoted to music, for instance—might become useful to those whose libraries are limited, and who are satisfied with what may be termed surface information in a compact form.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

A Modern School for the Violin. Book 5B By August Wilhelmj and James Brown.

Graduated daily exercises for the Violin. Books i. and ii. By William Henley. (Op. 53.)

Suite in four movements for Violin and Pianoforte. By A. von Ahn Carse.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

All interested in the publication, 'A Modern School for the Violin,' rejoiced to hear that the final books had been completed before the lamented death of the late Professor Wilhelmj. The fifth book of Studies has now been issued, and the remaining two books of the series are already in the Press. The new Book 5B consists of twenty important studies devoted to the higher branches of violin technique, such as firmness and advanced octaves in the higher positions; shakes, with double stopping; preparation for bravura passages; special studies for the positions; and so on. Many of the studies are original; but some are included from other sources. One very fine arpeggio study is the composition of Pietro Rovelli (1793-1838), a name not widely known, but belonging to a family of distinguished Italian musicians. Pietro was a pupil of Kreutzer, and the study mentioned above is well worthy to rank with the great master's immortal 'forty.' The value of the 'Modern School' is greatly enhanced by the excellent advice inserted as an Introduction to each number. The counsel in the present book on how to practise bravura passages is well worthy of attention. How true is the final remark—' Desultory and intermittent application is uscless!'

Although one must ever aim at improving technique by the study of works of an increasing degree of difficulty, a certain amount of daily practice at exercises well within one's capabilities is essential for strengthening the technique foundation. Much violin playing resembles a building showing visible signs of settling! For daily work the 'Graduated daily exercises' by William Henley will be found most suitable. They are in two books—Book i. containing forty exercises devoted to the first and third positions, and Book ii. a similar number extending between the first and fifth positions. The exercises are just what they should be—short and not too difficult, and they deal concisely with the special object in view, such as finger work, double stopping, martélé, chords, shakes, scales, arpeggi, &c. Apart from the technical exercise developed in the two books, their intrinsic musical value is considerable.

Mr. A. von Ahn Carse has written quite a charming little Suite of four pieces for violin and pianoforte. No. 1, is a dainty Gavotte; No. 2, a graceful Slumber song; No. 3, an attractive Minuet; and No. 4, a brisk and effective Moto perpetuo. Written most agreeably for the first and third positions, the whole work is well within the grasp of violinists of moderate attainments, and the numbers, either singly or collectively, should serve excellently as pieces for performance.

PART-SONGS BY BRAHMS.

O Jesus, tender Shepherd; Saint Raphael; Tender and pure; A hunter went a-riding; The Naiades; To the holy martyr Emmerano; The white dove. English text by W. G. Rothery.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Brahms is one of the comparatively few modern composers whose contributions to vocal music seem to have been influenced by consideration of what is grateful to sing. This is pleasantly in evidence in the above group of part-songs, and, coupled with the excellent translation by Mr. W. G. Rothery of the original text, should cause these choral gems to be welcomed by many choral societies.

The first of the series is a touching prayer for children, allied to a German folk-tune of studied simplicity and devotional character. A peculiarity of the music is that every note is a minim, but there is no monotony as might be surmised, the like duration of each note producing an atmosphere of reverential confidence, breathing the spirit of the lines. 'Saint Raphael' is also a prayer and, in common with its fellow compositions, is an arrangement of a German folk-song, one that is studiously simple in character. 'Tender and pure' is a reverential love-song, and the title aptly describes the music. 'A hunter went a-riding' tells a romantic tale of a damsel who was so modest as to withhold her name from the hunter, and so was chosen as his bride in preference to her two sisters. The delightfully gay music contains a suggestion of the early modes that greatly increases its attractiveness. 'The Naiades' are responsible for a good many mishaps. In the part-song bearing their name is related the tragic end of a love-sick hunter who was induced to join a maid of watery pedigree beneath the waves, and who in consequence 'In her bower for aye lies sleeping.' Musical variety distinguishes 'To the holy martyr Emmerano,' the measure constantly changing from 6-4 to 4-4, but the writing is simple, as becomes the subject. 'The white dove' is really a hymn of the Nativity, and the old-world character of the music is happily consonant with the quaint text.

Obituary.

PABLO SARASATE.

The front rank of great violinists has been broken by the death of Pablo Sarasate, an event which, we regret to record, took place at his residence, the Villa Navarra, Biarritz, on September 20. Born on March 10, 1844, at Pampeluna (Pamplona), in Spain, a fortress town near the French frontier, Pablo Martin Meliton de Sarasate y Navascues—to give his full name—became a student at the Paris Conservatorie in his eleventh year. There, as the favourite pupil of Alard, he gained first-prizes for solfège and violin. At an early age he entered upon the lucrative and exacting career of a virtuoso, at once meeting with success at l'aris, in the Départments of France, and in the Peninsula. It is said that 'no violinist has travelled more than he; besides making his way through Europe, from the remotest corner of Portugal to Norway, and from London to Moscow, he has visited America, North and South.'

As a youth of seventeen Sarasate came to England armed with a letter of introduction from Rossini to August Manns. It is stated in a certain book of reference and in nearly all the obituary notices of him that have appeared, that he made his first appearance in this country at the now defunct St. James's Hall, on May 22, 1861. As a matter of fact, he had played five days earlier, on Friday, May 17, at the third of a series of Opera Concerts at the Crystal Palace, conducted by Manns. On that occasion—his debut in England—he played the 'Fantasie sur les motifs du Massaniello' composed by his old master Alard, and the violin part in Gounod's 'Ave Maria,' founded on Bach's first Prelude, the singer being Madame Miolan Carvalho. Tietjens also sang at this concert. He played at the Philharmonic Concert of May 18, 1874, when he introduced Lalo's Violin concerto in F, and at the Musical Union in the same year; he again crossed the Channel in 1877 and 1878, and on March 30 in the latter year he played Lalo's 'Sinfonia Espagnole' for the first time in England; both the Lalo concertos were dedicated to Sarasate. Since then he has been a frequent visitor and welcome artist. In 1885 and 1886 he gave a series of orchestral concerts, conducted by Cusins, at St. James's Hall. He was the first to perform Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Violin concerto in E (Op. 32), dedicated to him, at the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1885, and his 'Pibroch' at the Leeds Festival of 1889.

As a composer Sarasate knew how to write effective music for the instrument of which he was so great a master. His Siguenerweisen, 'Jota Aragonesa,' and the four books of Spanish dances have attained a remarkable degree of popularity. As an eminent violinist he had, to quote the late M. Gustave Chouquet, 'purity of style, charm, brightness of tone, flexibility, and extraordinary facility. He sings on his instrument with taste and expression, and without that exaggeration or affectation of sentiment which disfigures the playing of many violinists.' In a word, Sarasate was an artist. He used to put his fine technique to the test in playing the last movement of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto at a great speed, and with tremendous dash and fire; yet, so great was his versatility, that he could play a Chopin nocture with tender grace and exquisite charm. His portrait—whole length and nearly life-size—was painted by Whistler in 1885 and exhibited at the Society of British Artists: it is now at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg, U.S.A.

The death at Brighton, on September 2, of SIR EDWARD WALTER HAMILTON, K.C.B., K.C.V.O., Mus.B., is recorded with regret. The son of the late Bishop Hamilton, of Salisbury, he was born at that city on July 7, 1847. At Eton he had as school-fellows Hubert Parry, Spencer Lyttelton, and Martin Goselin, who formed a quartet of boys keenly interested in music. As recorded in the biographical sketch of Sir Hubert Parry which appeared in in the same year, 1867. At Oxford, Sir Edward Hamilton was a pupil of Stainer. In later years he devoted much of his time to musical composition, his published works being a sacred cantata 'Praise the Lord, O my soul' (his degree exercise), various songs, Singing quadrilles, pianoforte pieces, &c. He had served on the Council of the Royal College of Music since the formation of the institution in 1883, up to the time of his death, and he was co-treasurer with the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton. As a distinguished servant of the State during forty years' valued service—he was joint permanent Secretary to the Treasury, upon his retirement in October, 1907—Sir Edward Hamilton had a great and well-deserved reputation.

Professor EDMUND KRETSCHMER died on September 13 in his seventy-seventh year, at Dresden, where he had for many years held a distinguished position as choirmaster at the Royal Chapel, keeper of Royal Archives, Royal Court organist, and conductor of the Dresden Teachers' Choral Society. He was a pupil of Julius Otto and Johann Schneider, and wrote a large number of works, both sacred and secular, including a number of Masses, one of which gained the first prize at an international competition at Brussels in 1868. Of his four operas, the most successful was 'Die Folkunger,' which was performed at about one hundred theatres, a record which only the greatest or most popular operatic composers have surpassed. A coronation march and other excerpts from this work are to this day favourite items at the better class of German orchestral concerts.

PAUL HOMEYER, an organist of some repute in Germany, died at Leipzig recently, in his fifty-fourth year. Born at Osterode in East Prussia, he came of a musical family, and was trained at the Leipzig Conservatoire, at which famous institution he became teacher of his instrument, after having spent some years touring as a recitalist in Germany and Italy.

The death took place at Dresden, on August 30, at the age of thirty-eight, of MAX LEWINGER. A former leader of the Gewandhaus Orchestra, Leipzig, he achieved distinction as a violinist in Germany. For the last ten years he was leader of the Dresden Royal Orchestra.

HOME MUSIC STUDY UNION.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—Will you allow me to call attention to the remarkable success which has attended the first year's working of the above Association? Many members have joined, and Music Circles have been formed in many parts of the United Kingdom and in several of the colonies. The Union was designed in order to help members to perform, or to listen to, music intelligently, with some knowledge of the underlying basis of its form and thought, and of the history of the development of the Art.

The 'Home Music Study Union' is now affiliated with the 'National Home-Reading Union,' and for a trifling subscription—barely sufficient to cover incidental expenses—it provides through its journal, The Music Student, skilled guidance in music study both for reading and practice. 'Course No. 1' is founded on Sir Hubert Parry's 'Studies of great composers,' and comprises a survey of the whole field of classic and modern music.

The honorary editorial committee—Dr. E. C. Bairstow, organist, Leeds Parish Church, Mr. H. A. Fricker, city organist, Leeds, Mr. T. J. Hoggett, lecturer on music, Leeds University, with Mr. Percy A. Scholes as editorial secretary—have studiously designed this course so that it may profitably be undertaken by any persons who are intelligently interested in music, whatever their standard of ability.

The Secretary of the National Home-Reading Union, 12, York Buildings, Adelphi, London, W.C., or I myself will be pleased to furnish information to any of your readers on receipt of stamped and addressed envelope.

Yours faithfully,

J. E. LAWRENCE,

63, Grange Avenue, Leeds. Hon. Secretary.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The artistic excellence of the Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood is being fully maintained this season. The new principal violin, Mr. M. Wolters, has proved himself an accomplished musician by his finished playing in familiar works for violin and orchestra, and the ensemble is fully equal to that of former years.

The most important of the novelties brought forward was Mr. Balfour Gardiner's Symphony in E flat, performed for the first time on August 27. The composer is favourably known to musicians by his 'Overture to a comedy,' and other orchestral works, some chamber-music, songs and pianoforte pieces, and his reputation will certainly be increased by his symphony, written three years ago, but since revised. It is not a great work, but it excites esteem by its saneness, sincerity, terseness of development and scholarly craftsmanship. The first movement creates a scholarly craftsmanship. The first movement creates a favourable impression; the second is most poetical; and the Finale, into which the second movement glides without pause, is typically English in the robustness of its themes and directness of expression. Sympathetically interpreted, the work was heartily applauded, as also was the composer on his appearance on the platform.

Another notable success by an English composer was the Pianoforte concerto in G minor, No. 3, by Mr. York Bowen. This work would more appropriately be termed a Rhapsody for, although it consists of the usual three sections, no break is made between them, and the treatment of the themes is very free. The slow movement is so short as to partake of the character of an interlude between the opening and closing portions, yet its tranquil beauty provides a most effective contrast to the exuberance of the context. The solo part is brilliant in colour, and was played with such verve by the composer that at the conclusion he was thrice called to the platform amidst the liveliest demonstrations of approval.

The following evening there was introduced 'A village suite' by Luard-Selby, which also met with a most cordial reception. The work consists of four independent movements severally illustrating 'The village festival,' 'In the water-meadows,' 'God's acre,' and 'At the smithy.' The first number is permeated with the spirit of the country dance, and the music is unaffectedly gay and rhythmic. The second section is more ambitious in character, being an avowed attempt to suggest the stirrings of life in Nature in early spring, and the result is a tone-picture of poetical character. A deeper note is sounded in the third movement. Phrases from the Requiem hymn, 'Ah, that day of tears and mourning,' are introduced and the orchestration is sombre and impressive. The concluding portion, 'At the smithy,' might represent a convivial gathering after the day's work is done, the music being extremely vigorous and instinct with robust life.

Owing to Mr. Wood having to attend the rehearsals for the Sheffield Festival—and presumably no English conductor being available!—the concerts on September 15 and 22 were directed by M. Edouard Colonne, from Paris, who secured excellent interpretations of several notable French works which wisely were included in the programmes.

'THE KINGDOM' AT MELBOURNE.

Elgar's 'The Kingdom' was performed for the first time at Melbourne at the third subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society, in the Town Hall, on August 10. Hearty congratulations are due to the conductor, Mr. George Peake, who displayed an intimate knowledge of the score, and to the vocal and orchestral forces under his control, whom he had evidently imbued with the spirit of the oratorio, the devotional feeling of which received adequate interpretation. Mention should also be made of the excellent singing of the soloists, Miss Lilian Reid, Miss Elsa Rogers, Mr. James Wade and Mr. Horace Stevens, the last-named acquitting himself with notable effect. The performance was an admirable sequel to that of the 'Apostles,' given by the same Society last year, and a hope is expressed that in the future the two works may be performed in succession so as fully to realize the intentions of the composer.

MR. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S 'FAUST' MUSIC.

The dramatic version of Goethe's 'Faust,' by Messrs. Phillips and Carr, produced by Mr. Tree at His Majesty's Theatre on September 5, will doubtless long be remembered; and it may safely be said that Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's incidental music will give pleasure to many when the production which called it forth becomes only a memory. It is the fourth time that Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has been commissioned by Mr. Tree to provide incidental music to plays of classic character. The impressiveness of the music to 'Herod,' 'Ulysses' and 'Nero' was admitted, but that to 'Faust' is on a higher artistic plane, and it must be placed amongst the most successful efforts of the composer. The subject, with its half-supernatural atmosphere, seems to have appealed strongly to the imagination of the Anglo-African, and the music is instinct with significance in consonance with the scenes. The Prelude to the Prologue possesses a dignity which admirably prepares the spectator for the scene in which the Spirit that Denies converses with the Angels Raphael, Gabriel and Michael. The second subject of the Prelude is the Angels' Song, which is taken up pianissimo with beautiful effect by an unseen chorus. The music is almost continuous throughout the Prologue, the words of the Evil Spirit being accompanied by tremolo on the lowest C in the orchestra, which, together with a few chords, form the leitmotive of this Personage. There is also much music in the witches' kitchen; a dance of apes and fearsome creations of the stage carpenter; a chorus for male voices; and when the vision of Margaret is seen, phrases of the Love theme provide an effective contrast to the fantastic and weird context.

The entracte to the second Act starts gaily with the subject of the Drinking Song, sung in the succeeding scene, and subsequently the basses anticipate softly some of the strains of the church music, after which is heard for the first time the beautiful and impassioned melody of the theme representative not only of the love of Faust and Margaret, but of the new birth of Spring, symbolical of the pure love which proves Faust's salvation. This fine subject is effectively and appropriately developed with the church music, the entracte ending sonorously with the Spring love motive. It was no light task to provide a fresh setting for the King of Thule's ballad, but Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has allied the legend to a melody which possesses charm, and is thoroughly in keeping with the spirit of the lines. This song should certainly be heard in our concert rooms. To suggest what is supposed to take place after the second Act the composer has had recourse to the 'Will o' the wisps' dance and the 'Ballet des sylphes' from Berlioz's 'Faust,' but before the fourth Act Mr. Taylor has written a Rhapsody of great musical interest, founded on the subjects of the Brocken scene music. While this is passing before the eyes of the spectator, the respondy is played again, but with the parts for the male chorus sung.

While admirably fulfilling its purposes in the theatre, Mr. Taylor's 'Faust' music is written and scored in a manner that would make it most acceptable in the concert room, and it is to be hoped that a Suite will be arranged and heard at Queen's Hall at no distant date. A word of praise is due to Mr. Adolf Schmid, under whose direction the music was produced.

OPERA IN ENGLISH.

The Moody-Manners Opera Company concluded its three weeks' season of opera in English at the Lyric Theatre on September 5 with Benedict's 'Lily of Killarney.' On the preceding Saturday, August 29, Halévy's 'Jewess' was revived and effectively interpreted with Madame de Vere-Sapio as the Jewess whom events prove to be a Gentile, Mr. Philip Brozel as the revengeful Jew, Mr. Charles Manners as the Cardinal with a living past, Mr. Seth Hughes as the reprehensible Prince, and Miss Kate Anderson as the irreproachable Princess. In a brief speech at the close of the performance Mr. Manners made the gratifying announcement that the season had been a financial success, a result upon which he is to be warmly congratulated.

CHORAL MUSIC IN SOUTH AFRICA.

There is a general impression that music in the South African colonies is dependent entirely upon the periodical visits of singers and instrumentalists from England. It is with a view of showing that choral and orchestral work flourishes not only in the larger cities but in the small towns, that I have ventured to write this short resume of my recent oratorio tours through Cape Colony, Orange River Colony, Transvaal and Natal.

Under the ægis of the municipality of Cape Town there is held every year a festival of choral music to which the combined choral societies of that city contribute a choir numbering between three and four hundred voices, whilst the Musical Society furnishes an orchestra of from sixty to eighty It was with this fine body of musicians thatwhen I landed with Miss Perceval Allen and Mr. William Green in Cape Town in July last-was opened the series of South African festival performances of which I am writing. One cannot speak too highly of the excellent choral and orchestral performances—of 'Samson,' 'The Messiah,' 'Hiawatha' and 'King Olaf'—that made the 1908 festival a memorable one in the history of music in Cape Town. There, 6,000 miles away from the centre of musical culture, is a choir that, without exception, any city of England might be proud of. The singers came to their work with an enthusiasm that I may truly say is only to be found in the choirs of our own North country. To these enthusiasts extra rehearsals are a delight, the result being precision of attack, breadth of tone with proper light and shade, combined with perfect knowledge of the work sung a combination of gifts that enables the singers to give that close attention to the conductor without which a proper reading of a work cannot be given.

The conductor, Dr. Barrow-Dowling, a man to whom music in South Africa owes much, is a musician whose tireless energy, breadth of view, and innate knowledge of choral picture-painting was responsible for the excellent readings of the works performed. Well might Cape Town be proud of its musical director, to whom the choir were devoted.

From Cape Town round stormy Cape Agulhas to Durban. Here again we find the municipality taking the choral work of the city under its protecting care, here again the same real enthusiasm. As conductor of the Durban and Berea Musical Society, Mr. J. F. Proudman has reason to be satisfied with the result of his first season. Back again by sea to East London, where Mr. W. J. Chapman presented us with an almost faultless rendering of 'Hiawatha,' a performance which would have pleased the composer by reason of its excellent touches of local colour in the choral reason of its excellent touches of local colour in the choral singing. From East London by rail, through some of the most beautiful scenery of Cape Colony, to Port Elizabeth, where the combined societies of Algoa Bay and Uitenhage gave a most excellent rendering of 'The Creation,' under the able conductorship of Mr. Horace Barton, a man thoroughly versed in the art of handling large choral bodies. From thence we went to the capital of the Orange River Colony, a long, tedious railway journey, broken only by the excitement of watching for wild elephants when passing through the Addo forest. An ambitious programme greeted us at the former capital of the Free State, four works being performed. The conductor, Mr. George Deale, an enthusiastic amateur musician, was fully justified in his selection by the fine singing of the choir and the really good work of the orchestra, From Bloemfontein we journeyed to Johannesburg and Pretoria. There miscellaneous programmes were given, owing to the difficulty found in keeping together a choral body in these cities of moving population. Mr. James Hyde, however, has an excellent orchestra, and I am glad to say that next year Mr. Laurence Glenton has promised me a chorus of 250 voices for the festival concerts. From gold to diamonds at Kimberley, where we found the same feeling of enthusiasm for the choral work, the choir, despite the extreme depression, fully maintaining its numbers of 1907. Under Mr. Ashworth, another amateur musician whose love for music leads him to give up his spare time and holidays to the training of the choir, an admirable performance 'St. Paul' was given, the second night being devoted to miscellaneous work, the unaccompanied glees by the choir being a feature of the concert.

ALBERT ARCHDEACON.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS AT QUEEN'S HALL.

The first of the four concerts to be given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra before Christmas takes place on Saturday, October 17, when M. The programmes included the overture 'Youth,' the tone-poem 'In the East,' the 'Dramatic overture,' prelude to the opera 'Ione,' and the two tone-pictures, 'On the heights' and 'On the march.'

At the Leeds Friendly Societies' Demonstration, held in the Town Hall on Sunday afternoon, September 13, the New Leeds Choral Society performed Bach's church cantata 'Sleepers, wake.' The soloists were Miss Lily Pearce and Mr. Marsden Williams, and Mr. P. Tuke accompanied on the pianoforte. Mr. H. Matthias Turton conducted, and gave a short organ recital.

Miss Margaret Layton gave a very successful vocal recital at the Victoria Hall, Braemar, on September 17, assisted by Mr. Alfred J. Layton and Dr. Essery. The programme included songs by Wagner, Strauss, Grieg, Verdi, Henschel, three Browning songs, the Bird songs by Liza Lehmann, and the Nursery Rhymes for vocal quartet by Dr. Walford Davies. MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, September 15, 1908.

The Court Opera re-opened its portals in the middle of August, and thus the first breath of life was infused into the new musical season. During the first few weeks, sundry foreign soloists sang as 'guests,' without however achieving foreign soloists sang as 'guests,' without however achieving more than partial success. A more energetic pulse did not begin to beat in things musical until Direktor Weingartner brought out Lortzing's 'Wildschütz' in a new setting prepared with loving care and expert knowledge. During the winter a number of interesting novelties are to be performed here for the first time, e.g., 'The vagabond' by Leroux, 'Benvenuto Cellini' by Berlioz, and 'Pelleas et Mélicande' by Debussy: while Johann Strauss's ballet Mélisande' by Debussy; while Johann Strauss's ballet 'Aschenbrödel' (Cinderella) will be revived in a new and gorgeous setting. It will be seen that Direktor Weingartner will not leab formation. will not look forward to a season lacking either in hard work or excitement.

The increasing popularity of the 'Volksoper,' directed by Herr Rainer Simons, has suggested the founding of another similar institution. The Raimund Theatre, which so far has been devoted to light drama and folk-plays, has just been rebuilt to suit operatic performances, the two directors of the Theater an der Wien, Herren Karczag and Wallner, having acquired the property by purchase. The unexampled financial success which 'The merry widow' has brought to them during the last few years—amounting in fact, according to the official information of Herr Karczag, to over a million kronen (£41,666)!—has strengthened these two directors' financial position so materially, and made them so enterprising, that they might well be bold enough to so enterprising, that they might well be bold enough to risk another operatic venture. And thus it came about that on September 13 the Raimund Theatre was opened with Flotow's old, yet ever green 'Martha,' and in the usual obbligato festival mood of a crowded house and with every possible signs of success. Whether a third opera house was exactly an acutely-felt need or not, only the experiences of the comics with the comics wi house was exactly an acutery term and show.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

In this city the Sacred Harmonic Society announces 'Samson and Delilah' (Saint-Saëns), 'Hymn of Praise' (Mendelssohn), and Brahms's 'Requiem' and 'Song of destiny,' in addition to Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.' Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion music is to be given by St. Mary's Choir during Lent, this noble work being presumably a novelty in Nottingham. Among the local societies there is an evident attempt to take a higher standard of work than formerly. At Gainsborough the Philharmonic Society proposes to give Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind' and Rutland Boughton's 'Folk-songs.' The Loughborough Choral Society is preparing Brahms's 'Requiem' and selections from 'Tannhauser.' The Boston Choral Society is studying From 'I annhauser.' The Boston Choral Society is studying 'Elijah,' and the Retford Amateur Musical Society Cowen's 'St. John's Eve.' The New Musical Society at Leicester intends to perform the 'Messiah' (Prout's edition), Schumann's 'Pilgrimage of the Rose,' Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' and 'First Walpurgis Night.' The Leicester Philharmonic Society announces 'Athalie' (Mendelssohn) and Constant of the West End Charal Society 'Caractacus' (Elgar), and the West End Choral Society intends to perform 'Solomon' (Handel).

The Nottingham University Normal students are preparing Somerville's 'Ode to immortality,' and the University is issuing tickets for a series of lectures to be given, with vocal and instrumental illustrations, the first to be on the subject of 'English Music from the time of Elizabeth to Henry

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT,)

Sheffield is at present resonant with choral preparations. Two, and sometimes three rehearsals per week, are being held in view of the near approach of the festival. The special choir intended to visit Canada, with Dr. Coward in command, in November, is also rehearsing for several hours each Saturday and, in addition, the choral societies are getting into harness with the ordinary winter's work. Further, the harvest season is on, and many places of worship now arrange for special cantata or oratorio performances in connection with the thanksgiving services. Already there have been performances of the 'Hymn of Praise' at St. Mary's Church (under Mr. J. A. Rodgers), Gaul's 'Ruth' at Ebenezer Wesleyan Mission (conductor, Mr. W. Cartwright), and Tozer's 'Two Harvests' at Trinity Wesleyan Church (directed by Mr. R. Thompson).

Looking ahead, the various societies promise some teresting music. The Amateur Musical Society announces interesting music. The Amateur Musical Society announces Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' to be conducted in December by Mr. Henry J. Wood. The Musical Union will follow in January with 'The Dream of Gerontius'; the second concert of this Society, in March, will comprise Bantock's 'Christ in the Wilderness' and a selection from 'Israel in Egypt.' Both concerts to be conducted by Dr. Coward.

The Sheffield Choral Union (conductor, Mr. H. Reynolds) has made an auspicious start with a growing membership. They have Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin' in preparation. An excellent and welland Cowen's An excellent and wellintentioned suburban body, the Hillsborough Choral Society, has re-started rehearsals, under Mr. F. Shimeld, with Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' and Sullivan's Thanksgiving Te Deum. The last-named popular work is also to be given at Attercliffe Church and at St. Augustine's Church.

The Rotherham and Doncaster Choral Societies have important work. Last year it was 'The Apostles'; this season Berlioz's 'Faust' has been chosen, and the two Societies will unite in giving a performance of the work in each town. Mr. T. Brameld directs both organizations. The Rotherham and Doncaster Societies will respectively

NEW WELSH WORKS AT THE LLANGOLLEN EISTEDDFOD.

The concerts given in connection with the Royal National Eisteddfod held at Llangollen on September 1 to 4 were among the most notable achievements at that event. Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' and two new choral and orchestral works of considerable dimensions, both by experienced Welsh musicians, were adequately prepared and performed. The libretti of the new cantatas were appropriately based upon Welsh legends. If notwithstanding the use and varied treatment of Welsh airs the music betrayed no special national character, this may be held to be a virtue rather than a fault. The hope for the future of Welsh creative art lies in the direction of a greater assimilation of the achievements of modern composers of all nations, rather than in the carving out of narrow insular grooves.

The first new work performed was by Mr. David Jenkins, of Aberystwith. It is entitled 'Llyn y Morwynior' (The Maidens' Lake). The libretto is compiled from a poem by the Welsh poet Gladyrys. There are six chief characters, and the situations provide ample scope for the dramatic employment of male and female chorus, separate and combined. The pith of the story is that a Saxon chieftain falls in love with Enid, a Welsh maiden, and is victorious in battle with her defenders, and that all the Welsh maidens drown themselves rather than fall into the hands of the conqueror.

Mr. Jenkins's music exhibits experience and fluency in choral and orchestral writing. A duet between Enid and Mervin, her accepted lover, is one of the most elaborate and effective numbers. A maidens' chorus gives the opportunity for an original treatment of the air known as 'The ash grove,' and the battle scene for a double choir of men's voices shows considerable constructive power, and leads to an exciting climax. On the whole it may be said that Mr. Jenkins has shown in this, his latest work, a decided advance in breadth of conception and style. The second work was by Mr. Harry Evans, who now resides at Liverpool. His cantata is entitled 'Dafydd af Gwilym,' and the story recounts amorous incidents in the life of this 14th century bard. The words, both Welsh and English, are by Mr. David Adams. Of the merit of his Welsh version we regret our inability to judge, but it is evident that the story works out admirably in providing suggestions for varied vocal and orchestral treatment. The opening scene introduces a love duet between Dafydd and Nest. The stern father a love duet between Dafydd and Nest. The stern father intervenes, and consigns Nest to a nunnery. Dafydd wanders disconsolately until he meets another maiden, Morfydd. The two develop a touching attachment, but Morfydd is torn from her lover and soon after dies of grief. Then Nest having escaped from the nunnery is reunited to Dafydd, and together they live happily ever afterwards so far as we know. Mr. Harry Evans has made this story glow with interest. His love music has emotional warmth, and his choral writing shows mastery of effect secured by comparatively simple means, although the harmonic idioms are modern. He is able to score effectively for the orchestra, and to write accompaniments interesting in form and colour. A country dance for orchestra was one of the most effective numbers, and was insistently encored. A requiem for Morfydd displayed the composer at his best. A long wedding chorus in waltz rhythm also caught the fancy of the audience, but the music here is hardly up to the level of other parts of the work. Doubtless English choral societies would like to know the cantata, but the existing English version is a fatal bar to performance beyond Wales.

The composers conducted their own works. There was a

The composers conducted their own works. There was a good orchestra, and the choir had been well trained. Although 'St. Paul' was performed on one of the wettest of the wet nights that distinguished the Eisteddfod, yet there was an immense audience that continually showed its appreciation of the music. The chorus had been trained by Mr. Wilfrid Jones, and he was to have conducted, but was suddenly indisposed. Fortunately, Mr. Harry Evans was at hand, and under his experienced direction the performance was

The soloists were Madame Amy Evans, Miss Edith Evans, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Spencer Thomas, Mr. Emlyn Davies, Mr. Thomas Thomas, Mr. David Evans and Mr. David Hughes.

BERLIN.

Dr. Richard Strauss and Dr. Carl Muck have been honoured with the title of General Musik Direktor, a distinction which, in Prussia, has so far only been enjoyed by Spontini, Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer. — 'Sardanapal, a grand historic pantomime in a prologue and three acts, based on the ballet of the same name by Paul Taglioni, newly arranged by Friedrich Delitzsch. Choreographic part by Emil Graeb: Musical accompaniment (with free use of historic original motives and sundry parts of the score by Hertel) by Joseph Schlar. Explanatory poem by Joseph Lanfi.' Such is the full title of the production in which the Kaiser is said to have taken a more than passing interest, and which is in some respects the last, or latest, word in stage effects, especially as regards the final scene, representing the destruction by fire of Sardanapalus' palace. The new music, by Herr Schlar, is of little account, and the 'original, historic' themes are difficult to recognize. But as a lesson in Assyriology the 'show'—this seems the right word—is more instructive than many visits to the Assyrian antiquities found in museums. And no wonder, for Professor Delitzsch, who is responsible for the scientific parts of the entertainment, is perhaps the greatest living authority on Assyriology. It was produced at the Royal Opera House on the 1st ult. — Professor Gustav Rossberg, the chief Armeemusik-Inspizient (Army-music inspector) of the Prussian Army, retires with a pension on October 1, and will be succeeded by Musik-direktor Th. Gravert, his former assistant. Seeing that the Prussian fighting machine numbers nearly 300 regiments, it would seem that the post can hardly be a sinecure.

BRUSSELS.

An opera by Edgar Tinel, to be produced this season at the Monnaie Theatre, should prove an interesting event. Its title is 'Catarina.' Other novelties announced are: 'Monna Vahna,' by M. Fevrier; and 'Ariane et Barbe Bleue,' by Paul Ducas.

BUSSANG.

'Le château de Hans' is the title of a new fantastic musical play recently produced at the local 'Théâtre du Peuple,' which was the first open-air theatre opened in France, and is now in its fourteenth season. The author of the very successful piece is M. Maurice Pottecher, while the music was furnished by M. Lucien Michelot.

CAUTEREF.

This little watering-place in the Pyrenees recently took somewhat unusual steps to get itself advertised in the world's Press free of charge. The authorities responsible for providing entertainments for the visitors arranged a performance, on August 15, of Wagner's 'Siegfried' in an open-air theatre! It was a bilingual affair, for the Siegfried was Dr. Stolzenberg, of Vienna, who sang in German, whereas the other artists used French. An audience of over 5,000 witnessed the performance.

CASSEL.

The latest thing in societies for the propagation of composers' works is a Spohr Society, which has just been founded here, where the master lived and worked for so many years. The director of the local conservatoire, Herr Heinrich Stein, is the instigator of the scheme, while Herr Louis Wolff, a nephew and godson of Spohr, is chairman of the committee.

CHEMNITZ.

The fourth German Bach Festival will be held here on October 3 to 5. The programme includes the Mass in B minor; the wedding cantata, 'O holder Tag, erwünschte Zeit'; the cantatas 'Mein Freund ist mein,' 'Du Hirte Israel,' 'Ich bin ein guter Hirt,' and 'Nun ist das Heil,' in addition to organ and instrumental pieces.

DRESDEN.

The Saxon General-Musik-Direktor, Herr Ernst von Schuch, has just celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his appointment as conductor of the Royal Court Opera, surely a record difficult to beat, and all the more wonderful as Herr von Schuch is still esteemed—and rightly so—as one of the greatest living conductors.

ELBING.

Gluck's 'Orpheus' was recently performed three times at the Municipal Theatre to crowded and enthusiastic audiences, though the soloists were either amateurs or pupils of the local musical school. Herr F. Rosenberger conducted.

HALLE.

The Sängerschaft Fridericiana, under the able direction of Herr Musikdirektor Otto Weinreich, performed on July 27 Elgar's five male-voice part-songs (words from a Greek Anthology). Their success was so marked that Herr Weinreich hopes to repeat them during the coming winter.

HEIDELBERG.

To celebrate the centenary of Mendelssohn, the Bach Society, under Professor Philip Wolfrum, will perform 'Elijah.'

TENA

The University celebrated the 350th anniversary of its foundation on July 30. Music played an important part in the festivities, the programmes of the various ceremonies—a festival concert, a festival church-service, the dedication of new University buildings, &c.—including Liszt's symphonic poem 'Festklänge,' which was originally produced at Jena on February 3, 1861; Beethoven's choral symphony, with words by the University's most famous professor, Schiller; Handel's 'Zadok, the priest'; and a Sonata for double wind-quartet, by Giovanni Gabrieli, the 16th century Venetian composer. Two new works by the irrepressible Max Reger, whose uncanny fecundity is one of the intellectual marvels of the present day, were also included in the festival scheme. These novelties by Germany's strongest present-day representative of abstract music were settings of the 100th Psalm for chorus and orchestra—of which, however, only the first movement was sung—and of a 'Weihegesang' (consecration-song) for contralto solo, chorus of men's voices, and wind instruments, the words by Professor Otto Liebmann. Professor Reger was created a doctor by the University, an honour which, amongst musicians, was before him enjoyed by Robert Schumann and Hans von Büllow.

LIÈGE.

To celebrate the eightieth anniversary of the day on which the heart of Liège's greatest son, Modeste Grétry, was brought back from Paris to his native town, a performance was recently given of his opera 'Richard Cœur de Lion.' A torchlight procession and an historic pageant were further items in the festival programme arranged by the town.

MILAN.

An International Theatre Exhibition, to celebrate the centenary of the birth of Verdi, is planned for the year 1913. Everything connected with the theatre will be shown, including scenery, costumes, musical instruments ancient and modern, machinery, and even contract forms, acts affecting copyrights, theatres, &c.

PARIS.

The prize of 10,000 francs for the best opera, offered by the great international competition initiated by the publisher Gabriel Astruc, has been awarded to a work composed by M. Louis Lambert, entitled 'Penticosa.'

PRAGUE.

Herr Gustav Mahler produced his latest symphony, the seventh, in this city, on the 19th ult.

ROMR.

It is announced that the Pope has given directions for a large organ to be erected in St. Peter's Church. The plans for the same are said to have been prepared several decades ago. Under such circumstances they will no doubt require some alteration, to allow for the latest inventions in organ-building.

SPALATO (DALMATIA).

A memorial tablet will shortly be affixed to the house in this town in which Franz von Suppé, the composer of so many tuneful operettas, was born.

'One hundred popular cantatas (secular)' is the title of a selected list of works which Messrs. Novello & Co. have issued. The immense range covered by compositions in cantata form is therein clearly manifested. They have been grouped in two ways: (i.) into works with and without solos; (ii.) into three grades of relative difficulty. Under each cantata is given a brief account of the libretto and the outstanding features of the setting. To this follows an estimate of the average time occupied in performance, and details of the scores and parts obtainable. Guidance is thus afforded to conductors and others in the choice of works. The booklet will be forwarded post-free on application to the publishers.

DR. J. E. BORLAND is delivering at Battersea Polytechnic a course of twenty-five lectures on 'The development of instrumental music.' As music usually receives but little attention in University Extension circles—the lectures being given under the auspices of the University of London—the scheme deserves every encouragement and merits emulation in other districts.

THE new.St. James's Hall has been formed into a limited company, which has acquired the entire interests of the late proprietor.

Answers to Correspondents.

While we are most anxious to answer questions to the best of our ability, we cannot undertake to send replies by post.

A.—You ask us to recommend you 'a good book on music, as an aid to a beginner who is teaching himself, a book that will instruct as to scales, phrasing, &c., and also the more advanced harmony.' If you will kindly state the instrument which you wish to master, we will endeavour to answer your question; at the same time, perhaps you will kindly give a little more definite information in regard to 'the more advanced harmony,' stating the books you have studied.

F. D.—Although the excerpt you have written out is rather ambiguous, we feel sure that the movement you want is the Poco adagio from Mozart's Symphony in C (Köchel, No. 425), composed at Linz, in November, 1783. It is arranged for the organ by E. J. Hopkins (No. 8 of Select movements, entitled 'Slow movement in F'), and is published by Messrs. Novello.

A WOULD-BE ORGANIST.—It is impossible for us to tell whether your American organ could be 'blown by mechanical power, and if so how, and at what cost?' You had better consult an organ-builder, as there are so many things to be taken into consideration.

P. F.—With the best desire in the world to help you to pass your examination, or to avoid a second failure, we cannot, without knowing your capabilities, advise you as to the piece you should play. Why not seek the aid of a good teacher?

Piu.—It is advisable not to begin the lessons too soon. Physique and temperament are considerations that should be taken into account. Eighteen years would be a safe age to commence.

BEAUTY RETIRE.—No portrait of Mr. Pepys has appeared in The MUSICAL TIMES, but it is not beyond the range of probability that there may be 'a prospect of seeing him there soon.'

P. G.—The 'Journal of the Folk-Song Society' is, we believe, only issued to members of the Society, but you might enquire of the honorary secretary, Mrs. Walter Ford, at 19, Berners Street, W.

H. E. H.—Victor Nessler's opera 'Der Trompeter von Säkkingen,' is well known in this country. 'It was not thus to be' is the celebrated song from that work and not, as your enquiry implies, an opera so entitled.

E. G. I. M.—The Society about which you enquire is doubtless the 'Home Music Study Union,' which has its headquarters at Leeds. See a letter from the honorary secretary on p. 652 of the present issue.

- F. W.—There is a certain affinity in all Haydn's compositions, but it would not serve any good purpose to hunt for passages that are identical in the vocal and instrumental works of the genial old 'Papa.'
- F. W.—The nine sonatas for the organ by S. de Lange, junr., are fine works, but they hardly rank with similar works by Rheinberger and Merkel.
- E. O. B.—You cannot do better than study Stainer's Organ Primer (Novello), as, in addition to being a treatise, it gives a description of the church organ.
- J. O. R.—The Flute sonata by Beethoven, mentioned in our issue of July 1, is, so far as we can ascertain, not yet published; but we will make further enquiries.
- E. J. R.—The Benedicite of which you send the opening bars is by W. T. Best; but it is in the key of C, not D, as written by you.

MDLLE. X.—A Bayreuth Festival will probably be held next year, but nothing has yet been decided on that point.

- J. D.—We have no knowledge of a 'Guild of Music in the North of London.' Do not be gulled by Guilds.
- W. W.—We regret that we cannot give the names of concert-agents.

THE HISTORY

MENDELSSOHN'S ORATORIO ELIJAH

F. G. EDWARDS.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

And a number of Portraits, including one of the COMPOSER.

"Another work of distinct value to musical historians. . . . The temptation to gossip over the incidents of the first performance has been quite successfully resisted, and the author lets Mendelssohn's own letters tell the story for the most part. . . . There are several portraits of those who took part in the original performance, and one most interesting portrait of Mendelssohn from a drawing in the possession of Mrs. Victor Benecke. work of compiling the necessary information has been excellently done, and the publication comes as a fitting celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the production of the work."

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER

ON THE

CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES

WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, CHOIRS, SOLO-BOYS, ETC.

JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success. immediate success.

THE TEN VIRGINS

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music."—Newcastle Journal.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers ... treated in a thoroughly artistic manner .. a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"Works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins.' "-Newcastle Daily Journal.

"The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and, as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata."—Leamington Chronicle.

"Bow and Bromley Institute Choir.—The hall was overcrowded "Bow AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. If the verdict of a miscellaneous audience, that could have no possible reason for being favourably prejudiced, is of any account in estimating the merit of a new work, a career that will rival that of the same composer's "Holy City" may be predicted for "The Ten Virgins." That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—The Musical Times.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than "Joan of Arc." Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."— Newcastle Daily Leader.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite "Holy City" we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices "No man knows better than Mr. Caul now to write for voices. ...
"Thou art the King of Glory, a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm."

—Birmingham Daily Gasette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment."—Pontypool Free Press.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

In this Selection most of the best-known passages of Gounod's masterpiece are comprised. The Soldiers' Chorus, a large part of the Garden Scene, and most of the Kermesse Act have been arranged, together with other excerpts, in such a sequence as to afford the best effect of variety and contrast; and by reason of this treatment the absence of scenery and action is not detrimental, as it is in a concert performance of the whole opera.

ST. PAUL

English version by WILLIAM BALL.

English version by WILLIAM BALL.

Mendelsohn was so devoted a disciple and so earnest a propagandist of Bach that it causes no surprise be should model his first oratorio, "St. Paul," on the masterpiece of his illustrious countryman. This is specially noticeable in the noble use of the chorale by the great Cantor, whose example the younger master followed with equal success. "St. Paul" was produced on Whitsunday, May 22, 1836, at the Lower Rhine Musical Festival, held at Düsseldorf, the composer, then in his twenty-eighth year, conducting the performance. In England the oratorio obtained its first hearing at the Liverpool Musical Festival, October 7, 1836. This performance, given in St. Peter's Church (now the temporary Cathedral of Liverpool), was conducted by Sir George Smart. "St. Paul" was the first choral work of Mendelssohn's issued in England, J. Alfred Novello being the publisher.

ELIJAH

English version by WILLIAM BARTHOLOMEW.

This, Mendelssohn's second oratorio, is invested with a two-fold interest: it reveals him in the maturity of his powers, and it was produced at an English Festival, the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1846 (August 26), and under the baton of the composer. After undergoing a rigorous revision, the work was performed in the following Spring (1847), four times in London (by the Sacred Harmonic Society), once at Manchester, and once at Birmingham, all six performances being conducted by Mendelssohn. On November 4 of the same year, at the age of thirty-eight, his music-loving soul was calmed in death.

HYMN OF PRAISE (LOBGESANG). English version by J. ALFRED NOVELLO.

English version by J. ALFRED NOVELLO.

Having taken Bach as his model for "St. Paul," what more natural than that Mendelssohn should go to Beethoven for the plan of this festive work? The Choral Symphony of the Vienna master suggested the form of the "Hymn of Praise," composed by Mendelssohn to celebrate the four-hundredth anniversary of Gutenberg's invention of printing. This Symphonic-cantata was first performed in the Church of St. Thomas, Leipzig, the scene of Bach's labours, on June 25, 1840, and in England at the Birmingham Musical Festival of the same year, both performances being given under the composer's direction. Like "Elijah," the "Hymn of Praise" underwent serious revision, the well-known "Watchman" scene being an afterthought which came to the mind of Mendelssohn during a sleepless night.

CHRISTUS

English version by WILLIAM BARTHOLOMEW.

An unfinished oratorio, intended by Mendelssohn to form the third of a trilogy with "St. Paul" and "Elijah," and upon which he was engaged up to the time of his death. The eight completed numbers, published posthumously, were first performed at the Birmingham Musical Festival, September 8, 1852.

ATHALIE

Music to Racine's Tragedy, with recitation for Concert use.

Music to Racine's Tragedy, with recitation for Concert use. Originally composed in 1843, for female chorus with pianoforte accompaniment, "Athalie" underwent various changes. During his sixth visit to London, Mendelssohn composed the Overture and March, and early in the following year he re-wrote the choruses, casting them in four parts, and scored the work for orchestra. After having been first performed in Berlin—December 1, 1845—it obtained its first hearing in England at Windsor Castle, on New Year's Day, 1847, when it was sung in the original French version. At the request of the Prince Consort, Mendelssohn sent a copy of the score, with an autograph inscription in French, to Queen Victoria specially for this royal was first performed in this country by the Philharmonic Society, at the Hanover Square Rooms, March 12, 1849.

FESTGESANG (HYMNS OF PRAISE).

As a complement to the "Hymn of Praise" (Lobgesang) the four pieces forming the "Festgesang" were first performed in the open Market Place, Leipzig, on June 24, 1840, in connection with the Gutenberg festival. In their original form they are for male-voice chorus with accompaniment of brass instruments, but at the request of his English publisher, Mendelssohn arranged them for mixed voices. In a letter dated "Leipzig, 30 April, 1843," written to Mr. E. Buxton (Ewer & Co.), Mendelssohn says (in English): "You will receive with these lines the copy of my 'Festgesang' in which I have made a few remarks in those passages in which Mr. Bartholomew has two different versions, and also the arrangement of the whole for a chorus with female voices. I think it will do well in this shape and have no objection to your publishing it. As I am to fix a price I would say four guineas.

. . . I should not like the accompaniment to be called pianoforte or organ, as if it had been originally intended for those instruments; but if you should like to say 'adapted for pianoforte or organ by the composer' you are very welcome to do so, as it is the truth. The same you may say about the arrangement for [which includes] soprano and alto. I only would wish to have on the title some allusion to the original shape, at least nothing which goes against it."

Part of the music of the second of these four pieces is well-known through its adaptation, by Dr. W. H. Cummings, to Charles Wesley's Christmas Hymn "Hark! the herald angels sing," which first appeared in a cheap form in The Musical Times of November, 1867 (No. 297). In the above-quoted letter Mendelssohn says, in reference to the English words of No. 2: "If the right ones are hit at, I am sure that piece will be liked very well by the singers and the hearers—but it will meour do to sacred words. There must be a national and merry subject found out, something to which the soldierlike and buxom motion of the piece has some relation, and the words must expres

THE FIRST WALPURGIS NIGHT

The English version from Goethe's Poem, by WILLIAM BARTHOLOMEW.

Goethe's famous poem appealed with strong force to Mendelssohn's dramatic instinct, of which the vigorous chorus "Come with torches" is a sufficient proof. Produced at Berlin in January, 1833, the "Walpurgis Night" was afterwards re-scored. Its first public performance in England was by the Philharmonic Society, at the Hanover Square Rooms, July 8, 1844, the composer conducting. A private performance of the work had, however, previously been given at John Hullah's house, June 14, 1844, Mendelssohn being one of the guests on that interesting occasion.

HEAR MY PRAYER

Soprano Solo, Chorus and Organ (or Orchestra).

Specially composed for some concerts given by Miss Mounsey (afterwards Mrs. Bartholomew), at Croeby Hall, and first performed there on January 8, 1845. Mendelssohn afterwards orchestrated the accompaniment at the request of the late Mr. Joseph Robinson, of Dublin. In this form the work was first heard at Dublin, on December 21, 1848, Mr. Robinson conducting.

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM

Incidental Music to Shakespeare's play (Female voices).
The overture, composed by Mendelssohn at the age of seventeen, was the work which first made him famous. First performed in public at Stettin, in February, 1827, Mendelssohn brought the score with him to London in 1820, his first visit to England, and himself conducted the earliest performance of it here on Midsummer night, 1820, at the Argyll Rooms, Regent Street. The remaining music—Scherzo, Notturno, Wedding March, and the vocal numbers—was not composed until 1843. The complete work was first performed at Potsdam, on October 14, 1843, and in England, under the composer's direction, at the Philharmonic Society's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms, May 27, 1844.

HYMN OF FAITH CANTATA

FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE WORDS ARRANGED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE BY EDWARD ELGAR.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY IVOR ATKINS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.
Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts, 5s.

THE TIMES.

Mr. Atkins has done his work well, and shows his wide experience among the chorus, while his writing for the orchestra is strikingly free from modern extravagances, and he has an invaluable sense of quiet dignity. . . . It was produced at the last Worcester Festival and has quite sufficient vitality to merit a second hearing.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Some passages are of special charm and significance, especially that in which the chorus sing without accompaniment the familiar text, "Faith, the substance of things hoped for," &c. There is neither space nor time for details, and I sum up in saying that Mr. Atkins may take courage from the character of his latest venture and go on to higher things.

STANDARD

things. STANDARD.

This represents, so far, Mr. Atkins's largest work, and marks a great advance on his previous efforts. . . . The work is worthy of high praise, as an earnest and expressive composition; and in the orchestral part Mr. Atkins reveals a true feeling for tone-colour and variety, which stamps the work as far away from the ordinary and a welcome departure from the usual cathedral service type of music.

MORNING POST.

MORNING POST.

The hymn extols Faith, and the composer's treatment of the words is scholarly, yet not dry. The music, with its ecclesiastical subject-matter, shows modern influence and here and there that of Elgar, yet not so as to suggest direct imitation. The work, commendably short, promises well for Mr. Atkins's future as a composer.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Atkins has evidently been influenced by the music of his librettist, and, as far as the orchestra is concerned, by the modern school in general. Strangely enough, the most striking music of the new work is to be heard in the orchestra, which, by many picturesque touches of appropriate instrumentation, illustrates the text with the happiest effect.

The composition itself is a straightforward piece of music, and affords good opportunity for choral effect of the more or less ordinary kind.

affords good opportunity for choral effect of the more or less ordinary kind.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

In this work Mr. Atkins has shown his capacity for musical development quite extraordinarily. I find it to be a great improvement upon the excellently good work which he has before given to us. Not only does his thought rise to a higher range than heretofore, but there is a far greater grip of his musical material, and a greater condensation of method. The chorus, "In the Name of our God," and the solo immediately preceding it, "Rejoice," show a grip and a tendency towards the intellectual side of music which are very satisfactory; his melody is fluent, but never inclined to run to seed or to become blank, and there is many a touch of real beauty in his orchestral treatment, where all of it is musicianly. where all of it is musicianly.
ATHENÆUM.

Mr. Atkins shows skill in musicianship, yet it never becomes unduly prominent. . . . The Hymn under notice is excellent of its kind, and festival authorities will no doubt soon give its author an opportunity of displaying his powers on a larger scale. . . . The music is not only clever, but also interesting, and thoroughly devotional.

YORKSHIRE POST.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The composer has produced an exceedingly well proportioned work. In sustained dignity of utterance, the music reaches a high level. It has real solemnity without any dryness, and the sensuous beauty frequently attained in the colouring has no touch of either tawdriness or vulgarity. There is something of Sir Hubert Parry's influence perceptible in the strong texture and fine construction of the music, together with a richness of colour which is outside the range of Sir Hubert's simple palette.

The music is eminently natural, and two unaccompanied passages for the chorus achieve a genuinely impressive effect by very simple means. And there is not a bar that can be styled sentimental, pretty, or sensational, which is negative praise of a high order.

HIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

The musical treatment is in the modern continuous manner, without The musical treatment is in the modern continuous manner, without break, the alternating choral and solo sections forming one organic whole. Representative themes are employed, and with no little skill. One standing for Faith is the most important. A motive given at the outset by the brass gives an ecclesiastical stamp to the work, and use is made of part of the ancient hymn tune, "Vexilla Regis." But Mr. Atkins has the gift of melody, if not as yet of a very individual type; and there is lyric charm in the solo, "Unless the Lord had been my help," which is gracefully scored. The orchestration throughout is very good, and the voice-writing is effective.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.

Of the cantata as an art work! have no hesitation in speaking in terms almost superlative. Mr. Atkins is at once solid and interesting. There is not a dull moment; everywhere the music has a contagious warmth. One has the impression that all was given off at white heat. There is nothing laborious, nothing of the dry-as-dust style traditionally attributed to cathedral organists, nothing of the universally despised Kapellmeistermusik. On the contrary, Mr. Atkins, while in warp and woof having some kinship with Bach, is in colour and feeling as modern as Strauss. The solo, with its exquisite accompaniment, was especially beautiful, even where all was beautiful. Mr. Atkins has made his mark, and if he continues to progress at the same rate will, before many years, attain the highest rank.

BEYOND THESE VOICES THERE IS PEACE

FOR SOPRANO AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts, 108.

THE TIMES.

Like the prelude to "The Love that casteth out Fear," that of the new work is made up of two themes—one a restless theme of rugged outline and chromatic harmony associated with the weariness of life, the second a beautiful melody for the violoncello, which speaks of the peace beyond the voices of the world. . . After it the chorus breaks in with the words, "What profit hath man of all his labour." Parry uses the chorus here as only be can use it, making each voice declaim the words with extraordinary fitness. . . The central movement is perhaps the most original in the cantata. It is a chorus on the words, "To everything there is a caseon a time for every purpose under Heaven." the most original in the cantata. It is a chorus on the words, "To everything there is a season, a time for every purpose under Heaven, a time to be born, and a time to die," and the words are sung above a theme for the strings in C major of wonderfully comforting expression. The orchestral music reminds one of a Bach aria, so gracious is its flow and so beautifully is it knit together. It works to a wonderful climax at the words, "A time to love, a time to hate, a time for war," and is concluded softly by the chorus with the words "A time for peace."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In his music Sir Hubert make modest use of the representative theme, and aims mostly at melodic strains and orchestral effects of singular force. The word "force" is not here used as synonymous with noise in expressing the sentiment of the text.

MORNING POST.

Sir Hubert Parry's work shows all those good qualities of musician-like writing and skilled treatment which are always associated with his name, and his customary vigour was not wanting. . . . It is in the choral numbers that the real character is expressed. In his disposition of the parts in the chorus "To everything there is a season," Sir Hubert Parry shows his wonted skill and demonstrates once more that as a choral writer he stands pre-eminent as a worthy representative of a form of art in which this country has an excellent reputation, and one which works such as this help to maintain.

DAILY NEWS.

The principal feature of this work is its reflective nature. Once again Sir Hubert Parry has proved the value of this class of text for musical illustration. . . . The choral writing remains, as ever, strong and effective, with a great deal of fugal episode, done in his best

DAILY CHRONICLE.

There are many of Sir Hubert Parry's admirers who will regard this as one of the most attractive of his shorter works. It certainly is an impressive composition, with fine choruses, effective solo passages, and brilliant orchestration, and it is a worthy addition to the library of the best class of British music. Moreover, it is easy to prophesy popularity for it among those many ambitious choral societies in London and the provinces that appreciate really fine motets.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Here, it will be seen, is a subject exactly suited to Sir Hubert Parry's gift for reflective musical utterance, and he has given us in this work yet another example of dignified and restrained writing. The choruses, largely built up on the imitational style of which the composer is a complete master, are of due variety and of certainty of effect.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The chorus-writing generally is as usual of the strong four-square type of which the composer is such a master. . . . The mere texture of the part-writing has interest, while its dramatic strength and appropriateness are undeniable. The impression one gains from a first hearing of "Beyond these voices there is Peace" is that the text is a noble one, and in its sense of contrast and dignity of expression well worthy of a musical setting.

GUARDIAN.

The choral writing has all the qualities of solidity, breadth, and dignity which mark the composer's style... The section beginning "To everything there is a season," the chorus sing above a peculiarly suave and gracious melody given to the violins, and the whole effect is of the rarest beauty. Another fine passage is the chorus "Who hath measured the waters," which have a massive grandeur entirely appropriate to the text, and at the end of the work there is a broad and imposing climax on the words "They shall walk and not faint."

WAND OF YOUTH

(MUSIC TO A CHILD'S PLAY)

SECOND SUITE. FOR ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Op. 1b.

FULL SCORE, TWENTY-ONE SHILLINGS NET. ORCHESTRAL PARTS (In the Press).

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENT, THREE SHILLINGS NET.

In form the suite is very simple. Each of the six little movements is made up of two contrasting mu-ical ideas which alternate without any attempt at development. . . . In "The Little Bells" (scherzino) we of course expect and get plenty of glockenspiel and toy effects, but the chief theme has a merry ring which is not dependent only on such things. "Moths and Butterflies" and "Fountain Dance" illustrate pretty fancies daintily, and lastly we have "The Tame Bear" and "The Wild Bears." It is a whirling dance movement which, played with all the nervous energy with which the composer inspires the orchestra, completely carried the audience away. This popular ending alone would probably ensure its success.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

There are six little movements in this second suite, and their titles, such as "Moths and Butterflies," "The Tame Bear," and "Fountain Dance," make it easy to imagine what kind of child's music bis fancy and ingenuity evolved from the story. The pretty trifles cannot but please wherever they are introduced, even as they delighted the sympathetic listeners of Worcester.

MORNING POST.

A set of six numbers which gave unalloyed delight to the audience this evening. There is little doubt that the simplicity of design is immensely becoming. The resourceful and experienced treatment it receives is by no means wasted upon the material, but the fact serves to illustrate once again the advantage of an absence of complication in design. Such a plan leaves the invention of the composer a clearer field, and the result of such a combination of youth and middle age is to give a work that possesses more vitality than many a more complicated effort. There is much quaintness in all the numbers. The march has some wonderful modulations, the date of which it would be interesting to know.

DAILY NEWS.

The music is beautifully finished in every detail, and there is present The music is beautifully nnished in every detail, and there is present all the grace attaching to the composer's style. The best movements are the second, entitled "The Little Bells," which is extremely pretty; the fourth, called "Fountain Dance," which certainly gives a picture of uprising water; and the impetuous finale, described as the "Wild Bears." This had to be repeated. Indeed, its vigorous flow had something irrestirible about it. thing irresistible about it.

ATHENÆUM.

Speaking of the Suite generally, we think it is far more attractive than its predecessor. Composers do well at times to unbend, and to show themselves in a light mood, especially in the case of Sir Edward Elgar, who has devoted much to music of a serious order.

GUARDIAN.

They are almost perfect specimens of light music, most delicately fashioned, and replete with simple tunefulness and engaging touches of humour. . . The "Fountain Dance" is exquisitely graceful, and the riotous fun of "The Wild Bears" makes an exhilarating finale to the suite, and would assuredly never fail to bring down the most apathetic house

MANCHESTER COURIER.

It contains six short numbers, all of which are very dainty and fascinating, full of quaint and fertile imagination and orchestrated albeit lightly, still plainly in Sir Edward's mature style. . . . The performance was eminently successful.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The six short pieces of which the present Suite consists, are fresh, fanciful and full of brilliant and happy orchestral touches. The lightness of touch is delightful and the energetic and rhythmical music is rarely, if ever, oppressed by its new and gorgeous dress.

ENGLAND, MY ENGLAND SONG

THE WORDS BY W. E. HENLEY

THE MUSIC BY A. HERBERT BREWER.

PRICE Two SHILLINGS NET. Full Score and Orchestral Parts, MS.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It is robust in character and strenuous in expression, replete with the spirit of the words. . . . The song, which, apart from its poetic connection, is of real musical merit, should have a fortunate career.

MORNING POST.

Dr. Brewer has written many vocal pieces for orchestra, and in his choice of the medium of displaying his powers shows wise restraint. The present work forms an interesting composition, in which voice and orchestra have an equal share. The music succeeds well in describing the poem, and shows a considerable knowledge of effect.

THE ATHENÆUM.

The other novelty was a song, "England," by Dr. A. H. Brewer, who has set Henley's fine rhetoric to bold, straightforward strains; he provides, too, a stirring orchestral accompaniment.

THE SUNDAY TIMES AND SUNDAY SPECIAL. Dr. A. H. Brewer is very happy in catching the full-blooded vigour YORKSHIRE POST. It has the true patriotic ring, but yet is without that touch of arrogancy which makes the cheap type of music-hall patriotism.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

It is a setting to the patriotic poem of W. E. Henley, and expresses the loyalty and devotion of England's sons to the motherland. The song, with its full orchestral accompaniment, expresses that sentiment in music of a broad, healthy, strenuous character. It has a strength and individuality that should make it distinctive and popular.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.

The music is melodious, broad, graphic, and yet simple, and, in short, possesses all the qualities needed to ensure long life.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

This is no flamboyant effusion of patriotism, but a careful, studied attempt to portray the spirit of the words and their deeper meaning with dignity and sincerity. It should be successful wherever it is sung.

EVERYMAN

CANTATA FOUNDED UPON THE OLD MORALITY PLAY FOR

SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS NET.

Paper Boards, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Book of Words, 6d.; Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. Full Score, £3 3s. String Parts, 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts (on hire only).

THE TIMES.

The evening concert began with the most important of the Festival novelties, the setting of an adaptation from the morality play of "Everyman," by Dr. H. Walford Davies, a work of far too great importance and musical interest to be discussed in a few hurried words. It made a great impression and was received with genuine enthusiasm. It will not be a matter of surprise if the Leeds Festival of 1904 should be known as the "Everyman" Festival, just as that of 1885 is called the "Golden Legend" year. . . Dr. Walford Davies has contrived to give his music an austere character and a kind of remoteness of style while allowing himself every resource of modern harmony, and the use of the full modern orchestra. The words of the Deity, "I perceive here, in my Majesty," are set (for chorus) to a series of solemn chords, in which the dominant seventh is pre-eminent, and the opening notes of the work, representing "the passionless note of Death's horn" (we quote the admirable analysis by H. C. C.), form one of those sudden harmonic metamorphoses which would have been unimaginable by musicians of the past. This phrase and the opening passage of the song, "I am Death that no man dreadeth," give an extraordinary amount of character to the music: the clever characterization, of which this is a prominent example, is perhaps the most remarkable of the many fine qualities in the cantata. . . . The song of Knowledge, "O Glorious Fountain," with choral interludes, and the prayer of Everyman, belong to the most happily inspired pages in the work, but they are of a kind to which no written words can do justice. . . As already recorded, the reception of the cantata was most enthusiastic.

THE WORLD.

All the world which reads of musical doings in the daily rapers knows

THE WORLD.

THE WORLD.

All the world which reads of musical doings in the daily papers knows now that a new composer of the first rank has revealed himself at Leeds. Just as Elgar stepped up, "Gerontius" in hand, to the platform where the tiny company of real English composers stood, so has Dr. Walford Davies arrived with his "Everyman." And this work shows high talent of so original and masterly a kind that it may well be asked if this latest arrival among the composers is not going in future to stand in front of them all. . . . I cordially echo the judgment of one whose opinion, but seldom given to the public, must ever carry the greatest weight: "Everyman is the noblest work produced by an Englishman for many years."

DAILY NEWS.

At a bound Dr. Walford Davies has sprung to the front rank of our younger composers, for here one has not only to praise technical achievement for its own sake, but also what is more rare, the resources of modern music employed for the expression of deep poetic ideas. . . .

He has kept his music as simple as possible, and yet his language is a modern language and transfixes the heart of the old morality play, interpreting in music that which is for all time. The composer has shown nothing short of genius in his solution of the problem. . . The appeal of Everyman to Kindred and Fellowship is full of a curiously sinister comedy, which one had not expected from Dr. Walford Davies on the strength of his previous musical achievements. It is impossible, however, to go into details concerning this remarkable work. . . At the end of the work Dr. Walford Davies was received with an enthusiasm which is rare indeed.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Dr. Davies, in his work "Everynian," must be held as a man of strength and brains. . . . The chorus and character of "Everyman" have the work to themselves, and it is all splendidly original.

OBSERVER.

OBSERVER.

The most important novelty of the Festival, Dr. Walford Davies's setting of "Everyman," was heard on Thursday evening.... Dr. Davies's music has the great merit of being thoroughly sincere and appropriate. He has caught the spirit of the play, and produced a work that is far beyond anything he has previously done. There are pages in his setting of "Everyman" that indicate his possession of such qualities that the use of the word "genius" seems inevitable. The thematic material ... is simple, and yet new in effect. How difficult of achievement is this combination perhaps only those who have tried their hand at composition can know. "Everyman" was an instantaneous success. Dr. Davies, who conducted, was cheered on his appearance in a way that showed that his music had already won its way into the hearts of his interpreters... The chorus sang with enthusiasm born of conviction, and "Everyman" was launched on a career which should be long and prosperous, with every possible advantage in its favour.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This evening Dr. Walford Davies submitted his cantata "Everyman" to the judgment of a large audience, conducting it himself, and receiving what appeared to be a unanimous verdict of approval. Those present who were pastmasters in the study of audiences could hardly make a mistake on this point. There is the silence of indifference and that of absorbed attention. Of these the last-named prevailed as the solemn "argument" of the old-time "Morality" was driven home by all the power of music supplementing its own inborn force. In fact, the audience could not have been more sensitive to the work had a voice from heaven spoken the opening lines, "I pray you all give your audience, and hear this matter with reverence." . . . In all music there is something above forms, to wit, the spirit, which may, like Providence, fulfil itself in many ways. Of this fact Dr. Walford Davies's work seems to me confirmation. It is modern, and yet one sees there that which in the past would bave received other, though not necessarily truer, expression. . . There is an element of originality in the work, with much play of forceful imagination, and a sure eye for the right effect at any given moment. Other opportunities will be found for elaborating these points; let it now suffice to say that the Temple organist has made his mark upon contemporary art.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

A musical work of deep seriousness must be touched by a very peculiar and indefinable quality if it is to reach the hearts of a public whose first love is musical comedy. "Gerontius" had this quality, and so has "Everyman," as it would seem, though the style of Dr. Davies's music is absolutely different from that of Elgar's. It is not easy to describe this style, for it is unlike anything that one has previously known, and owes not one jot or tittle to the influence of Elgar or anyone else, unless it be Bach, whose powerfully plain ideas of conveying expression have probably served as a guide to Dr. Davies.

The music is astonishingly healthy and virile, almost rough at times, but there is not a bar which fails. In design so in detail; the composer has seized the right means of expression with a positively unerring instinct. To describe it as "unconventional" is to give but a faint idea of its newness. The composer has hampered himself with none of the ordinary conditions of cantata form; he uses his chorus and his soloists when he thinks best: he proposes none of the effects which can be got artificially; his one aim throughout is to enforce the meaning of the words as they come, and he has trusted to the power of directness and sincerity to make his appeal for him. The result is, without question, his justification. "Everyman" is a strange musical picture; it may even be "harsh and weird," but its strength carries the day; one can but hold one's breath and say that here is music which compels attention by its stern fascination.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The feature of the day—and, as it will probably prove, the feature of the Festival — was reserved for the evening concert. This was "Everyman," Dr. Walford Davies's setting of the old morality play, which, in dramatic form, has lately been made familiar to the public.

Much was expected, and expectation was more than realised. There was a universal feeling last night that this weirdest of all cantatas is likely to rank as one of the great successes of the Festival. A great ovation awaited the composer at the conclusion of the performance. He had distinctly scored.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.
Dr. Walford Davies's setting of "Everyman" as a cantata, specially written for this Festival, was beard this evening for the first time in public. It provoked a scene of quite exceptional enthusiasm, and there is no doubt that it is a striking, totally unconventional, and largely successful composition.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It may be that the Leeds Festival of 1904 will remain memorable because of the production of "Everyman." In this setting of the impressive old morality play we have a sincere utterance, the putting forth of a distinct personality and intimate faith, that has not been paralleled since the "Dream of Gerontius" first saw the light.

HUDDERSFIELD EXAMINER.

It was surprising, looking to the chromatic character of the music, what a vast amount of melodic beauty of the richest and purest character pervades it, especially in the choral and orchestral portions. The depth of expression and dignity of the work also seemed to gather strength.

For a century or more the vast majority of English children have been brought up in total ignorance of the racial and traditional folk-music of their own country. It is significant that, during that period, the musical taste of the educated classes has become more and more cosmopolitan, while that of the lower classes, at any rate in the towns, has been degraded to the level of the unlovely song of the street. Obviously the remedy is to restore the English folk-song to those to whom it belongs by right of inheritance.

Fortunately it still is possible to recover the songs themselves; indeed, many collectors have been and are engaged upon this necessary and useful work. The next step is to select the best of these, to arrange and publish them in a suitable and inexpensive form, and so place them within the reach of the teachers of primary and secondary schools throughout the country. That is the purpose of this Series, of which these songs collected in Somerset are the first instalment.

TECHNIQUE

EXPRESSION PIANOFORTE PLAYING

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful-to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et catera.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. VLADIMIR DE PACIMANN, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recita Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause. other cause.

THE ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

LLANGOLLEN, SEPTEMBER 1 TO 4.

A GREAT Welsh National Eisteddfod affords absorbingly interesting studies of Welsh character and temperament. You can scarcely claim to know much about the race unless you have sat through one of these extraordinary functions. Here are mingled fervid patriotism, intense love of language and old customs, pathetic hopes and fears, thrilling emotionalism that binds a multitude into one as in a vice, geniality and responsiveness to humour, crude commercialism, artistic craving, splendid capacities for choral performance often badly officered, blundering ineptitudes, and imperviousness to criticism and advice, friendly or otherwise. One is left with the thought that the Eisteddfod is a powerful formative force that might be even better directed than it is.

Can the Eisteddfod do more than it does in providing vent for the aspirations of the race, and moulding its artistic methods and aims? Intimate converse with some of the keenest and ablest of the Welsh exponents of views as to the utility and potentialities of the Eisteddfod, reveals divers attitudes. Some are deeply dissatisfied, and wearied with their fruitless endeavours to effect reforms. Others are sanguine that by united efforts the Eisteddfod can be vitalised and made far more useful educationally, especially as regards music. As music is the supreme attraction of the Eisteddfod, it is obvious that the future of the institution is in the hands of the musical educationists.

Fifty years ago the beautiful valley of Llangollen housed the Eisteddfod, and now again the townsfolk have been privileged to be the host of hosts. A huge and substantial pavilion, calculated to seat 15,000 persons, was erected on a sloping meadow in the precincts of the town. The slope was utilized to provide a natural terrace of seats that enabled the audience to see the platform. The disadvantage of the site was that it was approachable only by pedestrians via muddy roads and a churned-up field. The rain fell pitilessly nearly all the time, and the wind was boisterous and cold. Yet day after day physical inconvenience was braved, and large audiences trudged through the wet and mud to the rendezvous. On the wettest day the pavilion was crammed. Where else than in Wales could this happen?

Did Llangollen rise to the greatness of the occasion with regard to the main objects of the gathering? Partly, it must be gladly conceded. For a small town heavy monetary risks had to be encountered and the business heads had to shape plans in accordance with inexorable financial necessities. This being so, it is to the everlasting credit of the Llangollen Committee that they undertook the responsibility of presenting at their concerts two new and elaborate choral and orchestral works by Welsh composers, and Mendelssohn's great oratorio

"St. Paul." That the enterprise was fully justified and rewarded by success is recorded in The Musical Times, p. 662.

Other important sections of the musical scheme cannot be so unreservedly praised. The tests imposed at the competitions were generally not adequate to the importance of the occasion. The great audience listened apathetically, and the competitors, especially in the choral sections, often sang perfunctorily. That Welsh composers should be well represented at such an event goes without saying, but surely samples of the cream would have sufficed instead of the skim-milk thrust upon a disappointed audience. What possible advantage can it be to Welsh composers to demonstrate their weakness rather than their strength? If Welsh musical art had developed some special and characteristic excellence that differentiated it from cosmopolitan art, it would be right that it should have full scope in such an arena. But what traces were there in the music presented of such a distinct school? The ideal programme for an event of this magnitude and possible influence must be selected mainly with a view to present masterpieces of European art, to widen the outlook of conductors and choralists and to force the study of the highest technique. By thus coming into touch with the best that the world affords, Welsh composers are far more likely to develop their capacities than by continually listening to one another's compositions. Then again, the Welsh race has a genius for choral performance that is universally acknowledged and admired. The glorious heritage of fine choral music should be theirs, and yet they will not, or at least do not, trouble to explore the paths that lead to this wealth. On the whole it must be recorded that the Llangollen competition programme was a set-back for the cause of musical education in Wales.

A matter of some gravity must now be mentioned. The programme issued to the public day by day gave a list of entries in the various classes, and the inference was natural that most of the announced competitors would appear. Yet this was very far from being the case. Statistics are given below of the entries and appearances in fourteen classes:

The programme suggested over 5,000 competitors, but during the whole four days not more than 2,000 Now it would not be fair to blame only appeared. the Llangollen Committee for this lamentable failure of promise compared with performance. It is the system that has grown up in Wales that is at fault. Entries are constantly made quite casually, and accepted without further inquiry. Their number, and sometimes their quality, serve to grace the programme and entice the public. What is needed is an entrance fee which may be refunded on appearance, and that the Committee should endeavour to ascertain before the day's programme is issued who is likely to attend. Even in the best arranged competitions some competitor will fail to appear, but Llangollen has in this matter made an unenviable record.

Some smaller matters may be mentioned. placard on the platform should inform the public of the number and class of the competitor performing. Shouting from the platform is a sorry substitute for this obviously business-like and convenient arrange-Then, small events and adjudications, mercilessly conducted at great length in dumb show, should not be allowed to stand in the way of the most important competitions, in which hundreds of competitors are wearily waiting to take part, while a turbulent audience gets more and more exasperated. Lastly, when choirs and conductors have been captured and placed on the platform, they should not be permitted to still further delay the proceedings by leisurely arranging, deranging, and rearranging themselves and the pianoforte before making a start. It seems that no conductor, in the opinion of the next conductor, knows how to place a pianoforte properly. One of the choirs at the chief choral competition was allowed to occupy the platform nearly forty minutes, although the music performed lasted only thirteen minutes.

The adjudicators were Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, Mr. D. Emlyn Evans, Mr. David Jenkins, Mr. Harry Evans and Mr. J. T. Rees.

THE CHIEF CHORAL COMPETITION.

Open to choirs of from 130 to 180 voices. Prize £150 and £5 worth of music for the conductor. No second

TESTS.

- (a) Chorus (acc.) "Insulted, chained"
- (b) Chorus (acc.) "Ye nations" ... Mendelssohn
 (c) Chorus (unacc.), "The Hill of Calvary"

 J. H. Roberts

Four choirs sang out of the nine advertised as having entered. They were allowed to sing the pieces in any order they chose. In the criticism given below the pieces are identified by the letters given in the foregoing list.

Tonypandy (South Wales), under Mr. D. Evans, sang first. In (a) they displayed resilient rhythm, prompt attack and abundant vitality. The crispness and certainty of the execution were evidences of skilful drill. The tone and blend were not first-rate. Altos were weak in the balance, and the soprano quality was wanting in sweetness. There was little rich resonance. In (b) there was again conspicuous rhythmic unity, but accents were exaggerated, and for such a piece the rhythm was too pointed and jaunty. The alto tone was thin, and at times wheezy. The end Maestoso was taken too slowly in defiance of the composer's direction. On the whole an industrious but not striking performance. In (c) the intonation of the sopranos was untrue and there was rarely a beautiful chordal blend. The interpretation was non-temperamental. Tenors were excellent. Pitch fell beautiful tone were conspicuous teatures. Incy caught the nervous dramatic conception of the composer. A climax near the end was imposing. The ample resources of the choir were skilfully managed. The (b) piece was sung with considerable dignity. The tone, although attractive, had not sufficient fulness for this piece, and the sopranos lacked the brilliance called for. The reading and choice of temps showed good judgment. The last Macstoso made a fine climax to a good if not The last Massass made a new comments of the beautiful tone and first-rate performance. In (c) the beautiful tone and refined style told effectively, There was mood in the bland was often very sweet. The refined style told effectively, expression and the blend was often very sweet. rhythm was inclined to ponderousness and missed delicacy. A well-wrought-up climax was a good point. The last page was a half-glow instead of something like a blaze.

Rhymney Gwent, under Mr. Daniel Owen, sang third. In (a), which they sang in English, the rhythmic attack was often excellent, and there was correct mood in the expression. But the tonal attack was often uncertain, suggesting that some of the singers were not sure of the notes. The general impression made was fair, but not in any way striking. In (b) the tone was not resonant and blendful. Sometimes it was penetrating and thin. The rhythmic treatment was too staccato for the character of the piece, and the ends of phrases were often too sharply cut off. The fugal movement was pretty and dainty, rather than firm and dignified. The last Maestoso was taken Adagio, and so an effect designed by the composer was lost. In (c) great feeling was displayed. expression was tender, touching and sincere. B Basses lacked body and the intonation was not secure. Bnt notwithstanding technical faults the interpretation was a fine one. A whole tone was lost.

Llanelly, under Mr. John Thomas, sang last. In (a) the pace was quick, the attack vigorous, and the execution generally fluent. There was a tendency to over-emphasis. The fine drill of the choir was unmistakable. The tone was always good, and the expression, if not very dramatic, had some colour. In (b) the fine massive tone, especially of the basses, told splendidly. Great fervour was displayed, and there were adequate resources in the choir for the big climaxes. The last Maestoso was taken Lento to the detriment of the effect. In (c) the opening was sung pp without being called for, but the tone-blend secured here and later was certainly beautiful. There were too many forcible accents for a piece demanding Legator hythm and a generally smooth Cantabile. Nevertheless the interpretation on the whole was thoughtful and appreciative.

At the adjudication, Mr. Emlyn Evans, speaking in Welsh, said the competition was an interesting one, but not by any means the best that had been heard at a National Eisteddfod. Good renderings had been heard that day, and at least two of the four choirs had in their performances attained a standard worthy of the Eisteddfod.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor said that the adjudicators experienced some difficulty in making a final selection between two of the choirs which were very near to each other in merit, and they had based their decision on a certain point, which he would mention later. The fault of the Tonypandy Choir was the weakness of the altos. In the unaccompanied piece, though the rendering was rather impressive, the choir dropped almost a tone. The preliminary fuss made on the platform by Chester was very irritating, at any rate to the adjudicators, and quite unnecessary. But when the choir did sing there was certainly a good deal worth listening to. Several small mistakes were made, but the noticeable features about this choir were its beautiful and musical tone. The intonation was excellent and also the phrasing. The words were pronounced so that they could be heard perfectly well. Pitch was maintained throughout, and the singing was undoubtedly impressive in every way. There was a certain amount of over-accentuation. Rhymney Gwent lost the pitch, and the intonation was at fault more than once. The singing of Llanelly was a whole tone.

Chester, under Mr. J. Sheldon, sang second. They gave a masterful performance of (a). Clear finish and a the best kind. The pitch dropped a little, but everybody dropped at the same time, so that it was not noticeable. The singing of the last chorus was not so good as the other two pieces. The adjudicators had to base their decision on a rather fine point. Should they give primary consideration to accuracy, or should they select the choir which sang with the most emotion and real feeling, in spite of, say, just one or two minor errors? They came to the conclusion that emotion should be the governing factor in this case; therefore they had no hesitation in giving the first prize to Llanelly; Chester made a very good second.

On the second day the smaller mixed-voice choirs (65 to 80 voices) competed. A list of thirteen choirs was given in the programme, but only six choirs sang. The prize was £50, and the tests were:

(a) "The gliding river"(b) "The angels' chorus" T. Price Miss A. J. Williams

Neither of these pieces, whatever their utility in other directions, was fitted to occupy the attention of well-equipped choirs on such an occasion. Nantlle (Mr. T. Powell) sang with pure tone and in a refined style. The altos were not a sufficient balance. On the whole their performance displayed good technique and natural expression. The choir was well governed by the conductor. Wrexham (Mr. G. Rogers) needs a good deal more drill before it can hope to attain success. Much of their performance was loose in rhythmic attack, and the tone had that peculiar murkiness born of uncertain tonal attack. The altos were weak. There were glimpses of effective expression that showed appreciation. Maelor (Mr. John Wright) gave a rather fine performance of (a), and there were stateliness, effective climates and rapturous expression in their interpretation of (b). Holyhead (Mr. Hugh Williams) is a fine choir. The tone is (Mr. Hugh Williams) is a fine choir. The tone is mature and richly resonant, and their technique is excellent. There was no special charm in the rhythmic treatment of (a), but the general effect was gratifying. In (b) the beauty of tone and grace of style held the attention. It was evident that the conductor was an interpreter. A climax was missed, and there were slight failures of intonation. But it was clear that the choir had earned a high place. Coleford (Mr. J. H. Evans) gave a striking performance of (a), although the intonation of the sopranos was not always true. Some crescendos were well proportioned. The tone was pleasant and blendful. In (b) the singing was perfunctory and unimpressive. The tone again showed the good resonance of Trecynnon (Mr. W. Gwynne), a South Wales choir, sang (a) with intense expression. As interpretation the performance had much charm but the intonation was not satisfactory. In (b) the whole choir sang flat against the accompaniment. The consciousness of this no doubt paralysed the singers. If this choir can correct the fault of bad intonation, its good qualities should place it in a high grade.

The adjudicators placed Nantlle first, and specially commended Holyhead.

On the third day the most interesting musical event as the children's choir competition. Twelve choirs was the children's choir competition. had entered, and actually as many as eight competed!
The prize was £10, and the tests were:

(a) "Sleep, sweet baby" .. (b) "Hail, merry playtime" .. D. J. de Lloyd .. T. Price

It was generally felt that the performances in this class were among the most satisfactory heard throughout the Eisteddfod. The Rhos Jerusalem Choir (Mr. T. Hartley Davies) won the prize. A detailed criticism is given in THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, on page 102.

On the same day the ladies' choirs competed.

had entered, but only three sang. The tests were :

(a) "Bring we blossoms"
(b) "Flowers of May"... Schumann T. Owen Jones

Bangor (Mr. Thomas Thomas) gave only fair performances. The tone was rich, but the rhythm lacked grace. Pontypridd (Mr. W. Morgan) gave a good interpretation of (b), but the intonation was unsatisfactory and the tone lacked beauty. Rhymney (Miss Mary Richards), to which choir the prize was awarded, caught the right conception of (a) and sang with unity and generally beautifully in tune. In (b) the treatment showed correct judgment.

The fourth day was looked forward to with much interest. The male-voice choirs were down to compete, and as Wales is particularly strong in this department of choral activity, a good contest was expected. Eight choirs had entered, but three deserted and only five sang. The prize was £50. The choir had to consist of between fifty-five and seventy voices. The tests were:

(a) "Treasures of the deep" .. J. H. Roberts .. David Jenkins (b) "Sons of Gwalia" (Both accompanied)

Manchester Orpheus (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) was the only English choir to appear. In (b) the tone was rich and the execution fluent and highly finished. The expression, if a trifle formal, displayed no exaggeration and was always in good taste. Enunciation was a strong point. In (a) the basses were magnificent, and the expression caught the correct moods. There was no high colour, but rather conspicuous restraint. The execution was always clean, polished and refined.

Bargoed Teify (Mr. Tom Luke) in (a) soon began to show uncertainty of attack, and actual mistakes were made. There was some emotional expression and a dramatic climax, but these virtues could not balance the faults and inaccuracies of the singing. In (b) the rhythmic attack was crisp and clear, and the expression had remarkable intensity. Intonation gave way ominously in one place, and there were uncertainties as to notes.

Meibion Penmachno (Mr. J. E. Roberts) sang (a) laboriously. The tone was strained, and the tenors did not blend together. There was much ragged attack. The duet was nicely sung, and later there were agreeably sung passages. The end was loose. In (b) the blend, notwithstanding occasional roughness, had a resonant, tuneful ring. There was some ragged attack, and the ends of phrases were loosely quitted. The pianist had to help rather obviously. The climax was well conceived and was dramatically effective, although rough as music.

Meibon Dar (Mr. E. J. Clement), singing in English, gave an impressive performance of (a). Their style was dramatic, and the tone full. The bases were often very fine. The execution was not certain, some of the singers not always striking the "centre" of the pitch. On the whole the expression was excellent in intention, but the excitement of the execution tempted some singers over the boundary of good tone. In (b) there was much highly temperamental expression and considerable control. A certain B double flat was shied at. The finale was first-rate. Meibion Y Moelwyn (Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts) gave a vigorous rather than a beautiful performance of (a). Sometimes the execution was brilliant and exciting, but the ear was offended by unmusical tone and uncertain intonation. In (b) the same qualities were evident: warmth of expression and loose execution. It was a full-blooded interpretation, disdainful of details and exactitude.

The result seemed doubtful, especially in view of the reasons given for decision in the chief choral class. Would the adjudicators be swayed by emotional interpretation or by regard for refinement of tone and good musicianship, plus only fair colour?

Mr. Harry Evans gave the adjudication. He prefaced his remarks by a reference to Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's adjudication in the chief choral class, which had been held to glorify emotional interpretation regardless of technical perfection. Mr. Evans declared that Mr. Taylor did not intend to lay down such a principle. Accuracy and good technique were indispensable requirements of good performances, and only after they had been met could emotionalism come into the balance. In the case of the male-voice choir competition they had heard emotional singing associated with inaccuracy and faulty execution. But the Manchester Choir had given admirably correct and refined performances of both pieces, and with these qualities had contrived to sing expressively without exaggerating. The prize was therefore awarded to them.

This decision, coming from four Welsh adjudicators and only one Englishman, could not be challenged on the ground of national bias. But unfortunately, owing to the propensity of Welsh competitors to question all decisions against them, there has already been some regrettable newspaper correspondence on the subject.

The results in some of the other classes were as follows. In the glee and sight-singing three competed of the eight that entered. The test was Pinsuti's "Spring song," which is not a glee. The sight-singing was fair. Maelor and Clifton Glee were bracketed first. Some of the solo-singing was remarkably good. The successful singers were Mrs. Maud Lovelace (soprano), Miss Winifred Lewis (mezzo-soprano and contralto), Mr. Watkin Hughes (tenor), and Mr. W. H. Edwards (bass). Watkin Hughes (tenor), and Mr. W. H. Edwards (bass). The only male-voice quartet to appear out of sixteen that entered was Mr. Hopgood's party, and they were awarded the prize. Olga Harte, of Liverpool, gained the junior violin prize, Sydney Northcote (Bargoes) the junior pianoforte prize, and Ethel Jones (London) that for the seniors. Jenny Jones (Cardiff) gained the violoncello prize. There were nine competitors and some of the playing reached a high level.

A prize of fro offered for the composition of a pianoforte and string quintet, and open to the whole world, was awarded to a German composer, Heinrich Schalet, was awarded to a German composer, Heinrich Schalet, of Munich. Another composition prize was "for the best opera to take about 1½ hours to perform." prize offered was £20. There were no entries.

W. G. McNaught.

SALTAIRE. September 12.

The prize-choir of this town has resuscitated the competition which used to be a useful section of its work. Six mixed-voiced choirs sang "The sands o' Dee" (Myles B. Foster) and own-choice pieces. Crosland Moor Wesleyan (Mr. R. H. Dyson) was first. Five men's-voice choirs sang "Hohenlinden" (Cooke) and own-choice pieces. Nelson Arion Glee Union (Mr. Lawson Berry) was awarded the first position. There were also classes for soprano, bass and boys' solos. Mr. H. A. J. Campbell was the adjudicator.

NEW BRIGHTON (LIVERPOOL) EISTEDDFOD. September 19.

The adjudicators were Dr. Roland Rogers, Mr. Harry Evans and Mr. Dan Price. Four choirs entered for the chief mixed-voice choral competition, in which the tests were: "He, watching over Israel" (Mendelssohn) and "The river floweth strong, my love" (Dr. Rogers), a selection that did not afford the charm of novelty. Mr. W. Tattersall's Southport Choir won an undoubted victory with nearly perfect performances. The other choirs were Colne Valley (Mr. T. E. Pearson) 2nd, St. Helens (Mr. H. Berrey) 3rd, and Talke (Mr. J. Whewall). In the male-voice competition ten choirs entered, and only one field to appear. one failed to appear. The following choirs sang:

Warrington Male Choir. Warrington Apollo (Mr. H. Berrey). Goodshaw Glee Union (Mr. Burnel Peel).

Talke (Mr. J. Whewall).
Liverpool Cecilia (Mr. J. S. O'Reilly).
2nd, Wigan Harmonic (Mr. Arthur Bullock). Hindley Co-operative (Mr. J. Layland).

1st, Habergham Glee Union (Mr. E. Hitchon).

3rd, Nelson Arion (Mr. Lawson Berry).

The test-pieces were: "The beleaguered" (Sullivan) and "Must I then part from thee" (Otto).

BLACKPOOL. October 14, 15, 16, 17.

We are informed that the entries here constitute a record even for this mammoth festival. There are 366 vocal soloists, eight first-rate choirs in the challengeshield class, nine in the second choral, six in the femalevoice choir class, and ten in the male-voice classes. There is thus every prospect of a first-rate success. The present holders of the mixed-voice challenge shield are the Isle of Man Choir, which Mr. Looney conducts with such ability.

In the children's classes action-songs will be as usual an attractive feature.

A new departure has been made in the constitution of a festival choir of 160 voices for the purpose of giving performance of works at an evening concert. On the evening of October 16 the following works will be performed: "Sing ye to the Lord" (Bach), "Festival hymn" (Lee Williams), and "Folk-song variations" (Rutland Boughton).

BALLARAT,

We have received the programme of the National Eisteddfod of Australia, to be held in Ballarat during October. There are sixty-eight classes in the music October. There are sixty-eight classes in the music section. In the chief choral section the first-prize is £125 and the second £60. The test-pieces are "Praise the Lord" (Benedict), "Daybreak" (Faning), and "Godhead throned in power eternal" (Mozart). Mr. W. Short, one of the King's trumpeters, is the chief instrumental adjudicator, and he will join the board of choral adjudicators.

NEW CATHEDRAL PSALTER.

No part of the Church Service has received greater attention in recent years than the Psalms, and there is no better test of an organist's or choirmaster's qualifications than the manner in which the choir renders these matchless poems of Holy Writ.

The chief difficulty of Anglican chanting has always been the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant. In the "Cathedral Psalter," issued a generation ago, an endeavour was made to overcome this difficulty by the use of accent marks, and the striking popularity of the book has proved that the method therein adopted, if rightly used, was nearly perfect.

Experience, however, has shown that there was still room for improvement, and it may confidently be asserted that the nearest approach to perfection has been attained in the entirely revised and improved form of the work, entitled the "New Cathedral Psalter."

As the result of much careful study and practical knowledge, all ambiguity in regard to the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant has now been removed.

The "New Cathedral Psalter" is issued in three forms: (i.) with Superimposed notes; (ii.) with Prosody signs; (iii.) with Varied type, whereby a choice can be made of the form which may be thought most effectual in securing intelligent and reverent chanting. Moreover, the pointing is in every case identical, so that on such an occasion as a service sung by combined choirs, all three books could, if necessary, be used simultaneously.

Not the least important consideration in a pointed psalter is the matter of typography. In the "New Cathedral Psalter" bolder faced types, specially prepared, have been used, the result being greater clearness, while particular attention has been paid to the spacing between the words and lines so as to afford greater facility in reading.

In regard to the editing of the "New Cathedral Psalter," it is only necessary to say that it has been in the competent hands of the Bishop of Stepney, Canon Scott Holland, Sir George C. Martin and Dr. Charles H. Lloyd, all of whom have brought to bear their ripe scholarship and practical experience upon the work entrusted to their charge.

CROTCHETS.

One description of crotchets is indispensable in music, but another sort is most dangerous when applied to practical playing or teaching. Isolated facts and fads can never, by being placed together, form a system, whereas for the complicated problems involved in playing a musical instrument, system is of paramount importance, as witness the frequent failures from ordinary tuition. Macdonald Smith's Method is free from crotchets and isolated notions. Its fundamental principles have stood the test of time, and its practical results are frequently described as "miraculous," "magical," &c. In "Light on Pianoforte Playing," sent free by Mr. Macdonald Smith, the principles on which his well-known System is based are fully described.

PLAY AT SIGHT

is the readiest and best way of deriving

Pleasure from Pianoforte-Playing.

To enjoy a book, you do not need to puzzle out every word in every sentence, nor to commit its contents to memory-else where would be the enjoyment?

To enjoy a piece of music, you should not need to puzzle out difficult chords or passages, nor to "study" it for days and weeks.

THE EHREMAYER SYSTEM OF PIANOFORTE SIGHT-PLAYING

enables you to play a new piece of music at sight as easily-comparatively-as you would read a book.

The system, although strictly Scientific, is simplicity itself. One quarter-of-an-hour's daily practice is all that is necessary.

FEE for Complete Three Months' Course of Six Lessons £3 3 0

"To all who believe that, if music were properly taught, one should read a piece as one reads a book, I recommend Mr. Ehremayer's Course of Lessons. In my own Course for Beginners, I have used a small part of his scientific method of Sight-Reading with a success that has surprised even myself. Mr. Ehremayer knows more about the real problems involved in music teaching than anyone I have met."—MACDONALD SMITH.

My Booklet on Pianoforte Sight-Playing will be sent you post-free on application, and will give you all further particulars.

PABLO SARASATE.

The Musical Times.

NOVEMBER 1, 1908.

PABLO SARASATE: SOME PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

By SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE.

While the brilliant career of the gifted artist has been amply described in the many obituary notices which have appeared since September 20, few of them have thrown much light upon the modest and gentle nature of Sarasate the man. The reason is not far to seek, for the privilege of the many charms with which he compelled his intimacy was not granted to many, nor was the listeners. It is always interesting, and certainly famous violinist easily accessible, except to his useful, to know the working-methods of an artist compatriots and a few artist-friends. Somewhat who has 'arrived,' and much has been written about reticent to others, to these he was staunch, Sarasate's habit of working six hours daily at his frankly hospitable and generous; and when violin. Shortly after I made his acquaintance, he amused, as he frequently was, at their peculiarities and little foibles, would let off that boyish and infectious cackle of pleasure which they all loved

A few lines from one who had enjoyed his uninterrupted friendship for twenty-five years, may not be unwelcome to those who only knew and admired him at the distance which divides the platform from the auditorium, even if the personal note-inevitable in such a case-has to be struck more frequently than the writer desires.

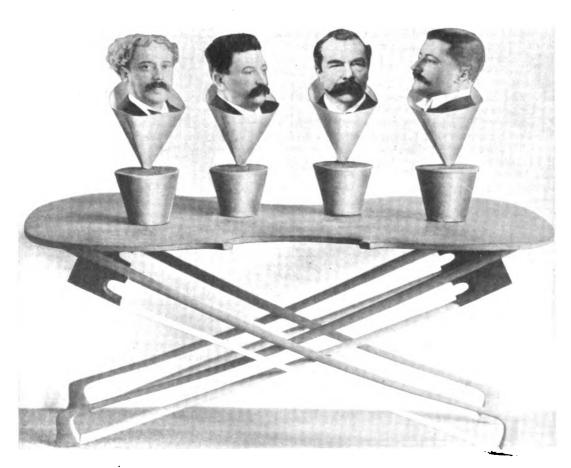

Natural ease and grace, without a trace of selfconsciousness or affectation, were the prominent features of Sarasate's personality as well as the striking characteristics of his superbly perfect playing; and the almost childlike simplicity habitual to him in private life was not the least of

JULES DELSART.

A CURIOUS PHOTOGRAPH OF A STRING QUARTET PARTY, TAKEN, ABOUT 1894, AT A DINNER ANNUALLY GIVEN BY THE LATE GUSTAVE BERNARDEL, THE PARISIAN LUTHIER.

(From the collection of Mr. Arthur F. Hill.)

told me that his real practice was only done during the summer months and never when he was attending to his engagements. The following should vouch for the truth of this statement.

When he introduced my 'Pibroch' to Germany (in 1890), he asked me to conduct its first performance and to spend a portion of the Christmas holidays with him at Frankfort. During the fortnight we were together, Sarasate never took his violin from its case, except to inspect the strings before the general rehearsal and again for a similar purpose just before driving to the concert. As we shared a small suite of rooms, I must certainly have heard him if he had played at all—but he did not. Only his phenomenal facility could account for the fact that the performance in question was a perfect one. True, he very diligently rehearsed ensemble music with his pianists when on his tours in later years, but that can hardly be called practice. As a matter of fact he enjoyed poking good-natured fun at those who were obliged to 'labour' on the violin, using, on such occasions, his bow-arm in uncouth fashion, grimacing and blowing hard through his nose upon the instrument. But then, Nature had made most things easy for Don Pablo!

At our first meeting I was strongly impressed, not solely by his rapid sight-reading—not a very rare faculty among violinists—but chiefly by his skin' of the music. Without any previous personal the Birmingham Festival of 1885, and one may readily understand his anxiety to know what was audience, we began anew. in store for him. 'Je suis myope' was his excuse end of the room. Nevertheless, his shortsightedness did not prevent him either from dealing easily with the technical difficulties or from entering into the spirit of the piece a prima vista. Only twice—with a muttered 'H-m, h-m' over a difficult passage—did we stop, and I was thoroughly astonished, but much too nervous to say so. the final chord there followed—for me—a somewhat embarrassing silence. Then he held out his hand, remarking, to my great relief, 'Je n'ai rien à dire, rejouons le encore,' from which I was shrewd enough to gather that he had expected to have a good deal to say. Well, he played it many times during the following years, and thus commenced a long friendship which was a constant source of pleasure, bringing in its train many kind and affectionate actions towards myself and family.

Not long afterwards, Don Pablo did me the honour to ask for a Scottish piece from my pen, and that it was satisfactory to him is shown by this England,' he writes, and then proceeds:

Je tacherais de me montrer en cette occasion un écossais pur sang—moins le stume-et de prouver que la musique nationale de votre pays est l'une des plus belles et poétiques qui existent au monde : vous-savez que j'en suis fanatique.

Encouraging letters on the same subject reached me in due course from many other Continental cities, from America, Spain and Mexico. One of them is signed 'Coll Stradivarius in mano, il vostro P. de S.'

Although Sarasate would not teach, he was always ready to advise and encourage young musicians, and when I requested him to play to the R.A.M. students he exclaimed: 'Oh, la jeunesse,' and consenting immediately, gave us, in company with that most accomplished pianist Madame Berthe Marx-Goldschmidt, of his very best.

On that memorable evening his imperturbability, under circumstances which might have disturbed the placidity of many another artist, was positively quaint. The first number on the programme was my Concerto, which I accompanied. Allowing his attention to be distracted, probably by the number of eager young faces quite close to him and the enthusiastic welcome he had just received, my friend started the opening phrase an octave higher than it is written. Hearing him calmly proceed, and knowing well enough that he was bound to 'come to grief' very soon, I followed without gift of at once getting intuitively 'under the making sign. But as the passage became gradually impracticable, he discovered that all was not as it knowledge of me he had agreed to my concerto at should be, and stopped. After a chuckle at his mistake, which was heartily taken up by the

In like manner, at the Norwich Festival of 1893, for propping up the manuscript on the mantelpiece he commenced, to the consternation of conductor while I took my seat at a pianoforte at the other and orchestra, playing the 'Pibroch' at the second subject, ignoring the beginning entirely. result naturally caused an abrupt stoppage of the proceedings, but Sarasate gravely put on his pince-nez, went slowly to Mr. Randegger's desk, peered into the score, and after smiling sweetly at the band, calmly resumed his place and a fresh start was made. These odd aberrations can hardly be called lapses of memory. They were, I take it, the consequences of a boy-like kind of dreamy wonderment produced by the impression of the scene before him, making him, for the moment, oblivious to everything else.

Attempts to compare his playing with that of other masters of the instrument—past or present are futile. He stood apart. Classical or not, that some of his most distinctive qualities have left their mark upon the art of violin-playing has been apparent for a good number of years. To me, the remarkable ease and elegance of his bowing was quite as astounding as either the nimbleness of his extract from a letter written a few days before the fingers or the infallibility of his intonation. With first performance of the 'Pibroch,' in Paris (under shut eyes, one could not distinguish any change of Colonne), in 1894. 'All right, Hurrah for bow; and in the gracefully smooth action of the right arm lay the main secret of his fine phrasing.

> That Sarasate was indifferent to the merits of contemporary violinists I cannot admit, since I have frequently heard him speak most generous praise. Nor have I been made aware of that lack of interest in the progress of the art which has been attributed to him. On the contrary, he seemed ever keen to make acquaintance with all kinds of new music, and was fully 'up to date' in his knowledge of it. Effortless charm, unfailing good-humour, an affectionate manner towards friends, and a gentle—I had almost said 'genteel'sort of Bohemianism which peered through the quiet dignity habitual to him, are among the chief characteristics of Sarasate's personality which remain in my memory.

Some years ago he began to suffer from bronchial trouble, and on each successive visit to England increased difficulty in breathing became more and more apparent. When last I saw him he told me that he could hardly breathe in London; 'This asthma will kill me.' And since the first serious warning-during a concert in Germany-of the final breakdown, we did not meet. Always averse to medical inspection, he fought bravely on until that day when he suddenly leaned against the wall of his room, saying, 'Do what you like with me.' After death it was discovered that he had lost both of his lungs.

This last letter, in which he makes allusion to his compulsory rest from music, will serve to show his undiminished interest in a colleague and his eagerness to give pleasure to his friends:

Paris, 18-4, 1907.

Caro amico-maintenant que je puis me permettre de faire de nouveau de la musique, je me suis octroyé le plaisir de faire la connaissance de votre intéressante suite, et je suis heureux de vous addresser mes félicitations sincéres pour votre nouvelle production qui est digne des précedentes.

Nous l'avons joué hier avec Diémer devant quelques artistes amis qui tous été ravis : je lui souhaite tout la succès qu'il mérite, et de faire le bonheur de son papá.

Much sympathy will be felt for Mr. Alfred Littleton (chairman of Messrs. Novello & Co.) in the loss he has sustained by the death of Mrs. Littleton, which occurred at 2, Palmeira Court, Brighton, on Thursday, October 1. Those who had the privilege of knowing Mrs. Littleton will not soon forget her kindliness of heart and the sunshine it brought into her happy home-life. Preceded by an impressive service at All Saints' Church, Hove, the interment took place at Hove Cemetery on October 5, among the personal friends present being Sir Alexander Mackenzie and Sir George Martin.

BATH:

ITS MUSICAL ASSOCIATIONS.

If he be in a contemplative frame of mind, the visitor to Bath may wonder what the Romans would have said on beholding their Aqua Solis in this year of grace, 1908. How would motor-cars strike them?—figuratively speaking, of course. And how interesting it would be to overhear any remark of Shakespeare—who thrice visited the city-upon seeing the slip-carriage glide into the station, while the train itself whizzed away to Bristol, after having covered the distance between London and Bath, 107 miles, in 108 minutes! The year 1634 is not so very far from Shakespeare's Then three military officers, in making 'A short survey of twenty-six counties,' stayed at Bath, and one of them recorded his impressions of the place. 'It is gouerned,' he said, 'by a Scarlet Mayor, and his 11. Brethren, 2. Maces, and is seated in a deep bottome, and neere 3. quarters thereof inuironed, with that sweet gliding Stream [the river Avon] . . . Wall'd most about, (except that part that the Riuer hems in) with as many Gates to enter her, as her Inhabitants haue Churches for them to enter, and just soe many rare Bathes, springing vp in her.' This warrior goes on to refer to the 'admired, vnparralell'd, medicinable, sulphurous hot Bathes,' and in speaking of its 'great Church,' he said, 'I dare auouch her to be, a fayre, neat, and lightsome Building, the Roofe stately, lofty, and curiouslie fretted, the windowes, large and fayre, though plaine, without painting.'

This 'lightsome Building' is the Abbey Church, historically and architecturally the outstanding feature of Bath. The stately edifice stands on or near the site of an earlier church in which King Edgar was crowned with great pomp on Whit Sunday A.D. 973. Would that we possessed some knowledge of the music performed at that coronation service. At the close of the 15th century the dilapidated state of the church made so vivid an impression upon Oliver King, Bishop of Bath and Wells, that he dreamed a dream in which he beheld a ladder, near the foot of which grew an olive tree, reaching from earth to heaven. On this the good bishop saw angels ascending and descending, while above the tree stood the Lord, who said, 'Let an Olive establish the crown, and a King the church.' As he awaked from his sleep Bishop Oliver King said to himself, 'Surely the Lord spake unto me, and as He has charged me so will I do.' This vision of the prelate is carved on the west front of the church (see the photograph on p. 699). At each side of the great window is a ladder, while on the western face of each of the corner buttresses is carved an olive issuing from a crown: thus is perpetuated the pun on the bishop's name—Oliver King.

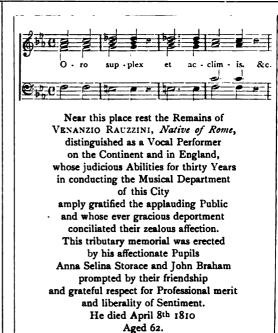

The bishop at once proceeded to erect a new church, but before it was finished the commissioners of Henry VIII. arrived and stopped the building, and everything of value was sold. For many years it remained roofless, and it was not until the time of Bishop Montague (1608-1616) that the building was completely covered in. There is a tradition that the attention of the Bishop to the incomplete condition of the church was called thereto by Sir John Harrington. They were both caught in a heavy rain-storm in Bath, when the bishop asked his companion to take him to a place of shelter. Sir John led him to the roofless north aisle of the church. 'We do not get much shelter here,' quoth the prelate, to which Sir John replied: 'If the church does not keep us safe from the water above, how shall it save others from the fire below?'

The fine west front of the church has already been referred to, but it should be added that the statues, doubtless of Elizabethan date, on each side of the door are those of St. Peter and St. Paul, to whom the church was jointly dedicated. pinnacles of the noble central tower can also be seen in the photograph on p. 699. The dimensions of the lightsome building are: length, 225 feet; height, 78 feet; height of tower, 162 feet. Deeply impressive is the interior view, looking from west to The groined stone roof, like at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, at once captivates the visitor who has eyes to see. On approaching the crossing, however, his organs of vision receive a terrible shock at the position of the caseless and divided organ, which not only entirely spoils the vista from north to south, but is an excrescence that casts a serious blot upon the beauty of the fair fane. With sections of the instrument scattered about here and there, this part of the church somewhat resembles an organ-builder's workshop; it will surely not be long before some change is made whereby the north and south arches of the tower are relieved of their disfigurements, and the various parts of the organ grouped together in some suitable and less assertive position.

It is pleasant to turn to a beautiful feature at the east end of the church, Prior Birde's chantry. Elected in 1499, Birde held office during the rebuilding of the Abbey, and his rebus—the letter W. and a bird—is here to be seen and in many other parts of the building. There seems to be a good deal of truth in the statement that after Westminster Abbey, Bath contains more monuments than any other church in the country, a fact—if such it be—which prompted the couplet:

These walls, so full of monument and bust, Show how Bath waters serve to lay the dust.

Among these numerous memorials of the dead is one to Dr. Henry Harington, famous as a physician and an amateur of music, who lived many years in the city, practising the healing and the divine arts with commendable assiduity. It should be mentioned, by way of correcting a common error, that although Dr. Harington's monument is in the church, his remains are interred at his birthplace, Kelston, Somersetshire. The following transcription of the memorial to Rauzzini, to whom reference will presently be made, speaks for itself:

Mention should here be made of the restoration of the church, carried out by Sir Gilbert Scott between 1864 and 1874 at the instigation of the then rector, the Rev. Charles Kemble. It should be recalled that Mr. Kemble was the editor of 'A selection of Psalms and Hymns, arranged for the public services of the Church of England' (1864)—a collection for which Dr. S. S. Wesley wrote his well-known tune 'Aurelia.' It is there set to 'Jerusalem the golden,' hence its name, and in all probability the tune was first sung at Bath Abbey Church.

As to the organs in the Abbey Church, the diary of one of the three officers already quoted from furnishes us with some information as to the instrument in the year 1634. He says, in reference to the church: 'She is adorn'd with a reasonable, rich organ, fayre seats, most curious, and uery neat, though lately erected.' history of the Abbey, dated 1723, we read that 'Divers citizens of Bath and some other friends caused the organ to be mended up at their own charge of 13 Pound and upwards.' Half-a-century later a guide-book (1778) says: 'The organ is a magnificent structure, adorned with figures of King David, St. Peter and St. Paul, as large as This instrument is allowed to be the best in the kingdom.' Built by the Jordans in 1703, this three-manual organ was replaced by a new one in 1838, when the imposing organ-case was ruthlessly cast out of the church, another instance of unpardonable vandalism. Some idea of its picturesque dignity can be gathered from the photograph on p. 701. The 1838 organ was built by Smith, of Bristol, and opened by Dr. S. S. Wesley, then organist of Exeter Cathedral, when the collection realized the sum of £600. Thirty years later a new organ was built by Messrs. Hill; the present instrument, erected in 1895, is by Messrs. Norman & Beard.

Among former organists of the Abbey Church have been William Priest, appointed by the Corporation in 1715, at a salary of £37 125. 6d.; Thomas Chilcot, the master of Thomas Linley; and Joseph Tylee, all three holding office in the 18th century. In the early part of the 19th century Thomas Field, father of Henry Ibbot Field, was chief musician, and, as stated in the October issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, Mr. J. K. Pyne officiated for upwards of half-a-century. He was succeeded, in 1890, by the present organist, Mr. Albert Edward New. A former chorister and assistant-organist of Bristol Cathedral, Mr. New took the degree of bachelor of music in 1902; took the degree of bachelor of music in 1902; Haydn. In the summer of 1794, during his he is also a Licentiate of the Royal Academy of second visit to England, the composer of the Music. No information is procurable as to the house in which this great master of English church music drew his last breath; and as no newspaper then existed at Bath-although Keene's Bath Journal, an excellent and still flourishing periodical, first appeared soon after, in 1742—all that is known of Crost's death 'at the Bath' is derived from a London newspaper, the Daily Journal of Friday, August 18, 1727, which states:

On Monday last died at the Bath, Dr. Crofts (sic), he was Organist and Composer to his Majesty, Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal, and Instrument Keeper and Organist of St. Peter's, Westminster [i.e., the Abbey].

It is followed with the faithful discharge of his regular duties, but he is projecting a two days' musical festival next year, at which he proposes to perform Mendelssohn's 'Elijah'—to commemorate the centenary of the composer's birth—and Parry's 'Judith,' both works to be given, with full orchestral accompaniment, in the Abbey Church. It is hoped that this proposed festival may become a permanent institution.

Bath is associated with some well-known names in connection with music. Dr. Croft died there.

by others, but not that of Dr. Burney, who is said to have accompanied Haydn. Immediately after this visitors' list is the following reference to the visit of the genial 'Papa':

'O had I Jubal's Lyre,' says a correspondent, 'I would sweep the strings, till Echo tired with repeating—Haydn treads upon Bathonian ground! And had this place, previous to his arrival, been the seat of discord, it must now be lulled into Peace by the God Harmony-while every Individual who hath Music in his Soul, must exclaim, with enthusiasm,

"ERIT MIHI MAGNUS APOLLO."

A week later the same journal contained the following poetic outburst in honour of distinguished visitor, and especially his host:

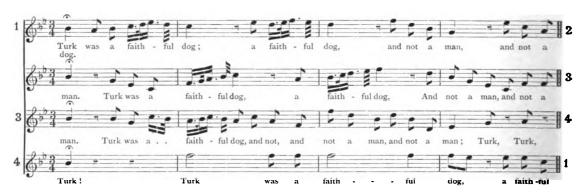

FRENCH VERSES Sent by a Friend at Bath to Dr. HAYDN and M. RAUZZINI with two Crowns of Myrtle.

De l'immortalité HAYDN, reçois la couronne, Tu ravis tous les cœurs, et le mien te la donne; Il devoit cet hommage á tes divins talents, Que l'universentier te rend depuis longtems.

O toi dont l'amitié á mon cœur nécessaire, Me devient, RAUZZINI, si douce et salutaire! Apollon de nos jours, comme lui Dieu du Chant, Reçois ici le prix de ton goût ravissant; Ta voix et les talents, de ce siècle la gloire, Sont á jamais gravés au temple de mèmoire.

Musically speaking Signor Rauzzini was the great man of the place. He had two houses, one in the centre of the town, and the other, a summer residence, in the Perrymead district, situated in the south-east part of Bath and overlooking the It was at the latter house—said to be Woodbine Cottage—that Rauzzini entertained his distinguished guests. Rauzzıni had a dog which he regarded as his 'best friend.' Upon the death of the animal his master erected a stone to his memory in the garden. Haydn was so struck with the memorial as to set to music a part of the inscription—doubtless the concluding words as a round or canon for four voices. Here it is:

the Abbey Church, which has already been quoted, performers, of the serves to record his invaluable services in the Maccabæus' given under her elder cause of music at Bath, and his funeral in 1810 was attended by a great concourse of people. We had been his pupils and seemed happy to exert themselves in the employment of their old master. He kept an open table for them, which was covered could procure.' John Braham lived with Rauzzini for three years, and was articled to him.

of Bath is the great astronomer Frederick William Herschel, afterwards 'Sir William Herschel.' Born at Hanover in 1738, he was educated as a professional musician and, coming to England, he became organist of Halifax Parish Church in 1765. A year later he accepted the 'agreeable and lucrative and crowded situation' of organist at the Octagon Chapel, Bath, a fashionable Episcopal place of worship, now a show-room for antique furniture and old china! For the choir of the chapel Herschel composed anthems, morning and evening services, and numerous psalm tunes, all of which seem to have disappeared. He used to teach from fourteen to sixteen hours a day, his pupils including many ladies of rank. His younger brother Alexander, a violoncellist, also settled at Bath, and in 1772 he was joined by His sister records that 'every spare moment of the day, and many hours stolen from the night, had long been devoted to the studies which were compelling him to become with all the delicacies which the season and Bath an observer of the heavens.' In 1775 the first of his large reflectors was erected on a grass plot behind his house near Walcot turnpike. In 1780 The next eminent name associated with the music he removed to 19, King Street, and during the intervals of a concert he might be seen running, still in lace ruffles and powder, from the theatre to his workshop. When the two brothers wearily returned from a concert late on Saturday night, the elder one was delighted at the prospect of being at liberty to spend the next day (Sunday), except the few hours which the chapel services demanded, at the turning bench; but, at that midnight hour, recollecting that the tools needed sharpening, they would run 'with the lantern and tools,' records the sister, 'to our landlord's grindstone in a public yard, where they did not wish to be seen on Sunday.' Many of his optical tools-grinders, polishers, &c.-are preserved in the science collection at the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington.

She also studied evening he would tell me, with a laugh, to take singing, and held a choir appointment in one of care how I stepped over his "new world," and the Episcopal chapels in the town, and used to copy not to run foul of his celestial system'! also recalls that Herschel placed his music-stand close to the window, and as he played over the air on the violin (Bernard evidently learnt 'by ear') the sky cleared. 'Beautiful, beautiful!' exclaimed Herschel. (Bernard thought he alluded to the music.) 'Beautiful, beautiful!' he repeated, 'there he is at last.' Hurriedly putting down his fiddle, Herschel snatched up a telescope and, despite the rigours of a January night, began to survey an absentee placed his music which he had long been seeking. It was at Bath that, as he could not afford to buy a good reflector, he made one for himself—a Newtonian, of five feet focal length, and with this he applied himself to study the heavens. One of his last appearances at Bath in the character of a professional musician was at the opening of the organ at St. James's Church, on May-day, 1792, when he conducted a performance of the 'Messiah.' In that year he was appointed private

But it should not be forgotten that Herschel began his distinguished career as a professional musician, and as such for sixteen years successfully practised | flavour o' warm flat irons.' in the city of Bath.

Dr. Henry Harington (1727-1816), a notable physician, alderman and mayor of Bath, has already been mentioned in connection with his monument in the Abbey Church. He devoted his leisure to composition, his creative output including several glees, and a sacred dirge for Passion Week, 'Eloi! Eloi! or, the Death of Christ' (1800). His round 'How great is the pleasure' is one of the prettiest of its kind. Among other notable families natives of the city, the first place must be given to the Linleys—the two generations covering a period of ninety years, from the birth of Thomas Linley, senr., in 1725, to the death of his son William in Thomas Linley, junr., met Mozart at Florence and the two musicians became warmly attached to each other. Elizabeth Ann, eldest daughter of Thomas Linley, senr., was so noted for her singing in oratorio, and for her beauty and virtue, that she was called 'The Maid of Bath.' She was painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds as St. Cecilia, and sat for the Virgin in his 'Nativity.' At the age of eighteen she became, under romantic circumstances, the wife of Richard Brinsley Sheridan. The Field family—of which John Field, the composer of nocturnes, was not a memberbelong to about the same period, Henry Ibbot Field, the pianist, having been born in 1797.

Passing on to the next century, the 19th, we meet with the Loder family, teachers, music sellers, and music publishers, of which the most distinguished members were Edward James Loder, composer of 'The brave old oak,' and other popular songs, and Kate Fanny Loder, afterwards the wife of Sir Henry Thompson. To the foregoing should be added John Bianchi Taylor (1801-1876), who rendered good service to the cause of music in his native city; John Philpot, father of Mrs. G. F. Anderson, the pianist and teacher of Queen Victoria; and Lewis Thomas, the distinguished bass vocalist.

The interest of the musical associations of Bath is not exhausted when we come to events. in or about 1704 that Richard ('Beau') Nash began his illustrious reign as 'King of Bath' in regard to its amusements and recreations. that time the Assemblies were great affairs of pomp and circumstance. Nash was master of the ceremonies, and the dancing masters were superior beings invested with almost regal dignity and authority. So much so, indeed, that the collections of country dances published in the 18th century bear on their title-pages such claims to distinction 'as danced at Court, Bath, Tunbridge, and other publick Assemblies.' Moreover, many of the dances and minuets of the time are named of the whole body, more or less, according to their degree of

A famous song, with a pretty catching tune, was named 'The Bath Medley,' an early instance of the city's diversions, as it is dated 1729. Here is a dance tune named after the place at which the waters were partaken — those waters of which Mr. Sam Weller said 'they'd a wery strong

It must not be forgotten that the myth of Handel's 'Harmonious Blacksmith' had its origin at Bath. The story is as follows, on the authority of the late Mr. William Chappell (in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians'), who obtained his information from James W. Windsor (died 1853), a teacher of music in the city. Some time about a century ago a music-seller named Lintern had his place of business in Bath Abbey Church-He was constantly asked to play the Air with variations in E from Handel's 'Suite de pièces pour le clavecin'; but as the whole set was so expensive that he could not sell sufficient copies to make a profit, he printed that particular 'Lesson' in a detached form and named it 'The Harmonious Blacksmith.' Upon being asked by Windsor the reason for that anvilic designation, Lintern replied that it was a nickname given to himself, as he had been brought up a blacksmith before he turned to the avocation of music. Thus the oft-repeated statement that Handel evolved the tune at a blacksmith's forge at Edgeware is in the nature of

An interesting sidelight on the early musical history of Bath is furnished in the 'Life and adventures of Timothy Ginnadrake' (1771), the pen-name of a local musician. He records that soon after Beau Nash began to reign—just after the visit of Queen Anne in 1702, which gave a distinct impetus to the place—a band of five performers played in a grove under some large trees. physicians of the city prevailed upon Nash to allow this quintet of musicians to perform in the Pump Room, giving, among other reasons:

That the least stroke imaginable upon any musical instrument has such an effect on the human body as to move its component machinulæ in all their parts giving the fibres tension, correspondent concussions; and consequently the spirits are not only rais'd, or made finer, but the other animal fluids are also briskly agitated, and their preternatural cohesions and viscidities destroyed.

Later on seven players from London were engaged at the rate of two guineas per week, equally divided Room band-modernised in its composition, of Pump Room, from 8.30 to 10 a.m., and at the balls, which formed so important a feature of the social life of the place. In 1767 the band included Benjamin Milgrove, organist of the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, and composer of a hymn-tune named 'Harts.' direction of Mr. Max Heymann, a former member of the Crystal Palace Orchestra. As the band is maintained by the City Council, Bath furnishes an instance of the municipal support of music. Moreover, it claims to be the oldest orchestral combination in the country, having existed for over two hundred years.

Breakfast concerts were given from 1747, and an advertisement in the Bath Journal announced that 'By desire of her Grace the Duchess of Devonshire,' the annual breakfast concert 'for the band of horns and clarinets' would take place at Spring Gardens on June 18, 1782. An important feature in the musical life of Bath was the building of the new Assembly Rooms in 1771, where the most important concerts were and are still given, though choral performances are sadly handicapped by the absence of an organ. In the year 1784 or 1785 Sir John Danvers founded the Bath Catch Club, of which John Bernard, the actor, was the first secretary and treasurer. On December 18, 1795, the Bath Harmonic Society was jointly founded by Dr. Harington and the Rev. J. Bowen. 'None but Noblemen, Gentlemen of independent Fortune, and those of the Liberal Professions, are admissible as Members, which is by ballot.' 1799 the Prince of Wales honoured the Society with his presence, and afterwards became a member; moreover, he became patron of the Society, 'with permission for each member to wear a Garter-blue Ribband, with an embroidered Plume over a Lyre, with the motto Curarum | Against the air 'Never, oh never,' he writes: dulce lenimen. Fourteen glees, interspersed with choruses, were sung each evening by the best professional singers procurable in Bath, and Mr. Loder accompanied the glees on the pianoforte! At ten o'clock the members and visitors sat down to a cold supper, 'for which, and their wine, each paid five shillings, all extras being paid out of the general fund.' Before supper a Latin grace, set to music by Charles Wesley, was sung, and after the feast Byrd's 'Non nobis,' songs, catches, &c., added to the post-prandial enjoyment of the music-makings which, at the midnight hour, were concluded with 'God save the King, verse and chorus, all standing.' The meetings took place at the White Hart, the identical hostelry at which Mr. Pickwick stayed on his memorable visit to Bath, on which occasion Mr. Sam Weller remarked that he had 'never heard a biled leg o' mutton called a swarry afore.' It is interesting to record that in the year 1794 the name of the landlord of the White Hart was Pickwick!

In 1822-23 Sir George Smart gave a series of nine subscription concerts at Bath, when Beethoven's first and fifth Symphonies were played, also the overtures 'Edvardo e Cristina' and 'Les Voitures Versées,' by Rossini and Boieldieu respectively, for the first time in England, and Moscheles produced one of his Pianoforte concertos. Sir George's own set of the programmes of these concerts is preserved at the British Museum, together with the following receipt, bearing a four shilling stamp, of the erection of an organ which no longer exists:

Received March 12, 1824, of Sir George Smart, the sum of Two hundred and ten pounds for an organ erected in the Bath Concert Room for Sir George Smart and Mr. Loder. for Self & Robson per. B. FLIGHT.

Previous to the commencement of the series of concerts (1824) for which this organ was built, Smart gave six performances of opera at the Theatre Royal. His great achievement there, however, was the Bath and Somersetshire Musical Festival, held June 15, 16, 17, 18, 1824, 'for the benefit of the United City Infirmary and Dispensary, and Casualty Hospital.' The sacred performances were given in the Abbey Church and the secular concerts took place at the Theatre Royal. At that festival one of the soloists was Master S. S. Wesley, then a Chapel Royal Chorister, aged fourteen, who sang 'Lord, what is man?' from Handel's 'Redemption,' and in various concerted pieces. Some of the annotations made by Smart on his own copies of the programmes are most amusing. In reference to the performance, which occupied forty-two minutes, of 'a selection from an unpublished sacred poem The Ark, written by the Rev. W. Lisle Bowles, and set to music expressly for this festival by W. C. Manners,' he indignantly says:

A most disgraceful performance this Ark, owing to the incorrect state of the parts and apparent want of knowledge to correct the wind instruments.

The parts were so incorrect here that first Mr. Lindley [violoncello] left off playing, next Mr. Loder [violin]; I went on alone, receiving not the least assistance from Mr. Manners who stood at my right hand.

At the performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' 'Mr. Loder objected to having the March, being too common in Bath'; at the 'Messiah' performance Catalani sang Guglielmi's 'Gratias agimus tibi' (with clarinet obbligato) at the beginning of Part 2; and between 'He was despised' and 'Surely He hath borne our griefs' Dr. Harington's 'The Eloi' was sung! Upon this Smart comments:

The Eloi took about 13 minutes. No orchestra. The organ began the first movement alone and I accompanied the rest at the pianoforte alone. It was sung too flat nearly all through.

Space can only be given to three more brief specimens of the annotations of Sir George Smart at the Bath Festival of 1824, which he conducted 'at the pianoforte':

I know that my Redeemer liveth.' Sung in E flat.

Poor Master Wesley!

In considering the present musical activities of Bath, the Pump Room Band has the first claim if only by reason of its antiquity, but as it has already been considered we may pass on to mention the Bath Choral and Orchestral Society, now entering upon its twenty-sixth season. This Society was originally started in 1882 as an orchestral organization, and gave an annual series of concerts. When, in 1890, the Bath Philharmonic Society (conducted by Mr. Albert Visetti) ceased this winter the members intend to perform the 'Messiah' and 'The Dream of Gerontius.' With the exception of three seasons, Mr. Henry T. Sims has been conductor since 1882. A native of Bath and an Associate of the Royal College of Organists, Mr. Sims is organist and choirmaster of the church of St. John Baptist, Bathwick.

The 'Amphion Anglicus' contains no fewer than fifteen laudatory poems, more or less of a doggerel character, in praise of its composer. Some were by old pupils—e.g., W. Crofts (Dr. Croft), organist of St. Anne's, Soho, whose concluding lines are:

> As I my Voice mature in Judgment raise And Imitate the Beauties now I Praise.

Occasional Motes.

It was a happy thought of Mr. George Riseley to include in the scheme of the recent Bristol Musical Festival (noticed on p. 725 of the present issue) Samuel Wesley's fine eight-part motet, 'In exitu Samuel Wesley's fine eight-part motet, 'In exitu Israel.' Wesley, born in 1766, was a native of Bristol, where his father, Charles Wesley, the hymn-writer, 'Óld Sam'had his headquarters for several years. as the composer was called, to distinguish him from his gifted son, Samuel Sebastian Wesley-produced the motet nearly one hundred years ago. The occasion was the 'Musical Morning Party' Samuel Wesley gave at the 'New Rooms, Hanover Square,' on Saturday, May 19, 1810, at 1 p.m. Mrs. Billington headed the list of vocalists, and the programme was in the nature of a 'bumper.' The chief items were as follows:

March in the Overture to ' Dei	damia	٠			Handel.
Invocation to the Deity (W.	ords	from	Thons	son's 'Seasons')					S. Wesley.
Organ Trio					Seb. Bach.
Mr. Wesley	and A	ır. M	ajor.

Solo (violin)					Sch. Back.
Mr.	Salom	on.
Sonata (pianoforte and violin)					Seb. Bach.
Mr. Wesley
Full antiphona 'In exitu Isra					S. Wesley.

It will be observed that Bach figured largely in the programme of a century ago. The 'organ trio' was probably played on the planoforte, à quatre mains, by Wesley and Major. The Morning Chronicle in the advertisement columns of which the complete programme appeared—contained the following notice of this important event: 'The Morning Musical Party (sic), given by Mr. S. Wesley on Saturday at Hanover Square Rooms was very fashionably attended; there was also a numerous assemblage of professors and amateurs.' Not a word about the music!

'The Sheffield Choir'—which includes contingents from Leeds, Huddersfield, Barnsley, Southport and Newcastle - on - Tyne — numbering 200 voices, left Glasgow for Montreal on October 23. Conducted by Dr. Henry Coward, and under the spirited organization of Dr. Charles Harriss, these full-toned choralists will give oratorio performances at the following places in Canada and the United States: Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Buffalo, St. Catherine's, Hamilton, Brantford, London, Lindsay and Peterborough. The tour on the other side will last from November 2 to 13; on the latter date the party will sail from Montreal for home. Among the numerous social and other attractions of the choir's sojourn in Canada will be a visit to Niagara Falls, a banquet given by the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto, a lunch at the hospitable board of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in the same city, and last, but not least, every member of the choir will be presented to His Excellency Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada, at the Government House, Ottawa. Various Canadian musical societies will extend a hearty welcome to the English singers, who, under so genial a cicerone as Dr. Harriss, are sure to have a right good time. May all success attend them in demonstrating to our kinsfolk beyond the seas the perfection of English choral singing.

To the list of present-day composers of Symphonies given in the article 'Is the Symphony doomed?' in our October issue, must be added the names of our our October issue, must be added the names of our gifted young countrymen, Dr. Vaughan Williams, who has just finished a choral 'Sea-Symphony,' on words by Walt Whitman; Mr. Arnold Bax, who has completed, and Mr. B. J. Dale, who hopes soon to complete, his first effort of this kind. Amongst foreign composers there are M. Theodore Dubois, who has just finished a 'Symphonie française,' his first work of the kind; Mr. Silas G. Pratt, of Pittsburg, U.S.A., who is the author of a 'Lincoln Symphony,' composed in honour of the forthcoming centenary of the birth of the great forthcoming centenary of the birth of the great American President; Herr Akos von Buttykay, whose work is sure to possess interesting qualities, seeing that Prof. Arthur Nikisch is responsible for the first performance, at the Berlin Philharmonic Concerts; Herr Reinhold Becker, whose work bears the high opus number 140, stands in C major, and was recently produced at Dresden; Herr Paul von Klenau, in F minor, produced at München; Herr Waldemar von Baussnern, whose work, entitled 'Youth,' will be produced by Generalmusikdirektor Fritz Steinbach at one of the Cologne Gürzenich concerts; Herr Hugo Kaun, who has chosen 'An mein Vaterland' for the title of his work, thus recalling Joachim Raff's first (Prize) symphony, which bears a similar designation; and finally Herr Emil Paur, conductor of the Pittsburg Orchestra, which body of players will produce his 'In der Natur,' a symphony in the regulation four movements.

The preliminary prospectus of the ninety-seventh season of the Philharmonic Society has now been issued. Three of the seven concerts will be given at Queen's Hall before Christmas. The following conductors have been engaged: Mr. Henry J. Wood (November 12 and 26), Mr. Landon Ronald (December 11), M. Camille Chevillard, his first appearance in England (on February 2, the concert 'In memory of Mendelssohn'), and Mr. Arthur Nikisch (May 13). The conductor, or conductors, of the concerts on February 18 and March 3 have yet to be appointed. In regard to new works the prospectus states:

The Directors contemplate the production of the following interesting novelties:

A new orchestral work, 'In a summer garden,' by Frederick Delius, conducted by the composer.

new orchestral tone-poem, 'Summer,' by Arthur

Hervey, conducted by the composer. A new orchestral Symphonic poem, 'Lamia,' by Edward MacDowell.

A new orchestral work, 'Guy Galloway' (a border ballad), by John B. MacEwen.

A new orchestral work by Ethel Smythe. The overture to 'Le Baruffe Chiozzotte,' by Leone Sinigaglia. Liszt's 'Faust,' for orchestra and male chorus. solo by John Coates. First time in London under Nikisch.

The presence of Signor Puccini in the French capital prompted the directors of the Opéra Comique to devoie a week's répertoire to that master's works. So 'La Tosca,' 'La vie de Bohème' and 'Madama Butterfly' were given under the direction of a young Italian conductor, Signor Marinuzzi, who was specially engaged for the purpose. He conducted without a score, having evidently made Puccini his specialty. Germany has her great Wagner and Brahms conductors; who then will grudge Italy her 'Puccini' conductor?

The King Edward Professor of Music, Sir Frederick Bridge, will deliver a course of five lectures during the season at the University of London, the subject of his discourses being 'Composers of Classical Songs.' Admission to the lectures, which are open to the public without fee, is by ticket, for which application should be made to the Academic Registrar, University of London, South Kensington.

Millionaire musical-autograph collectors may gratify their desires by acquiring three treasures now being offered for sale by a Leipzig antiquarian bookseller. The first is Beethoven's 'Bagatellen,' seven short pianoforte pieces (Op. 33), consisting of nineteen folios, for which the sum of 22,000 marks (£1,100) is asked. The second 'Lot' consists of the original of the same master's 'Thirty-three Variations on a waltz by Diabelli' (Op. 120), composed in 1823. It may be acquired — without any copyright advantages to recompense the buyer—for 42,000 marks, or £2,100, which is equal to, say, £49 for each of the forty-three folios constituting the little volume. Thirdly, there is the original score of Wagner's 'Love-feast of the Apostles,' valued by its present owner at 12,500 marks, or £625, a mere bagatelle for so elaborate a work and as compared with the sums demanded for the Beethoven trifles.

Mr. William Wolstenholme is giving a series of organ recitals in America and Canada. We are glad to learn that the tour gives promise of much success, which we sincerely hope will be fully realized. Mr. Wolstenholme expects to be back in the old country about Christmas-time.

Viennese papers announce the discovery, by Herr Alexander Hajdecki, of twenty-six hitherto unknown letters of Beethoven. They are all addressed to the master's friend Bernhard, editor of a Vienna paper and author of sundry operatic librettos. Even more important than the letters seems a long document of forty-seven pages, written throughout in Beethoven's almost illegible handwriting. This takes the form of a Pro memoria, and is also addressed to Bernhard, to enable him to prepare a petition in proper form, to the court of appeal, in connection with the unsuccessful action brought by Beethoven to obtain the guardianship of his nephew Carl, after the death of that unworthy youth's father. The document is stated to be a further proof of Beethoven's nobility of character, and of a degree of culture remarkable in one who never received the benefit of any scholastic training.

This from a Yorkshire newspaper:

Tenor trombone would join any band for employment; bricklaying preferred.

The absence of any reply to the above advertisement would doubtless be very mortarfying to that tenor-trombonist.

At a municipal banquet the Mayor rose and said: 'I will now call upon Alderman Smith-Brown to propose the toast of "The Clergy and Ministers of all Denominations," after which the choir will sing Ye spotted snakes.'

The famous collection of old musical instrume: formerly belonging to Herr Paul de Witt, t proprietor-editor of the Zeitschrift für Instrumentenbahas been acquired and presented to the city Cologne by Herr Commerzienrath W. Heyer, to for the nucleus of a new historico-musical museum. To this has been added the collection formed by the well known firm of pianoforte manufacturers, Messrs. Ibach, of Barmen, as well as a number of instruments, specially purchased. Thus Cologne will soon be able to boast of one of the most representative museums of the kind in existence.

Messrs. Schuster & Loeffler, of Berlin, announce the early publication of a new and complete edition of the literary works of Carl Maria von Weber. The volume, edited by Herr Georg Kaiser, will contain no less than forty articles not included in any previous collection. It will be interesting to see whether the new editor will make an attempt to 'explain away' those passages in which Weber as conclusively proved himself a bad critic—vide his remarks on Beethoven's fourth Symphony—as in his operas he demonstrated the fact that the said bad critic was by no means a bad composer.

German musical papers record the production of a 'Satyrspiel' composed by Herr Gustav Wied and bearing the fascinating title:

 $2 \times 2 = 5$. Surely this is 'something new'? It is a charming idea that deserves to be developed. For instance, a title like might prove a truly elucidatory guide to the deep inner significance of the Symphonic poems by certain wild-eyed, long-haired young men of 1900 + 8, speaking figuratively.

ELY CATHEDRAL: THE NEW ORGAN.

'One of the most glorious shrines in Christendom.' And who, in visiting or re-visiting the mother church in the Fen country, will hesitate to endorse that designation? 'Nowhere can we better study the boldly clustered marble pillar with its detached shafts, the richly floriated capitals with their round abaci, the yet richer corbels which bear up the marble vaulting shafts, the bold and deeply cut mouldings of every arch great and small. Lovelier detail was surely never wrought by the hand of man.' Thus Professor Freeman, in speaking of the six easternmost bays of the choir, 'the very purest and most beautiful English Gothic of the 13th century.' One can almost imagine the Psalmist to have been inspired to write 'Strength and beauty are in His sanctuary,' after beholding Ely Cathedral.

And now the organ has been made to harmonize with the stately fane, having been re-built and enlarged by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, of Durham. The instrument occupies its former position on the north side of the choir, and Sir Gilbert Scott's handsome case (c. 1850), designed after that in Strasburg Cathedral, has been retained. (See the illustration on page 708.) Advantage has been taken of the spacious triforium at Ely by placing the 32-feet pedal pipes and the tuba (solo organ) in that part of the building, from which elevation the huge recumbent pipes of the deep-voiced stop and the assertive tones of the other (on a 20-inch wind) have no difficulty in making themselves heard. A particularly good feature of the organ is the pedal department; on the other hand the mixtures—of which there are ten ranks

The Musical Association will open its thirty-fifth session at the King's Room (Messrs. Broadwood's), Conduit Street, on November 3, when Mr. Alfred Kastner will read a paper on 'The harp as a solo instrument and in the orchestra. Subsequent arrangements include papers by Dr. E. W. Naylor, Mr. J. Gordon Cleather, Mr. R. R. Terry, Dr. Henry Watson, Dr. H. P. Allen and Dr. W. H. Cummings. It is a matter of deep regret that, in obedience to his doctor's orders, Sir Hubert Parry has been compelled to relinquish the office of President, which he has so efficiently held since the death of Sir John Stainer in 1901. Sir Hubert will, however, continue his connection with the Association by serving as a Vice-president. The nev President is Dr. W. H. Cummings—an excellent selection.

Mr. W. W. Starmer has written an illustrated booklet on the 'History of the bells of Withyam Church, Kent.' (Tunbridge Wells: C. Baldwin.) In this interesting brochure he gives a detailed account of the bells in this fine old church from 1555 to the present time, including full particulars of the peal dedicated this year.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS: NOTES ON ITS EARLY HISTORY.

The Report for 1865-66 gives the names of the official information: following ten lecturers: James Coward, John Crowdy of Free-chant fame), G. A. Macfarren, Joseph Barnby, J. H. Griesbach, E. F. Rimbault, W. H. Longhurst, James Higgs, Edward Herbert and B. St. J. B. Joule. The Report for 1866-67 states that 'The three prize compositions of 1866 have been published in a most superior style by Messrs. Novello & Co., and every member supplied with copies thereof.' An attempt was made at this time to issue a printed 'Summary of be known on application to the Secretary: proceedings,' but it was resolved:

That the Quarterly Record of Proceedings should be incorporated with the Organist newspaper, and that the Council should enter into an arrangement therewith by which they would be entitled to supply every member with a copy 'free of charge, except for the necessary amount of postage.

The Organist, like some other English periodicals devoted to music, did not last long-only nine months.

The year 1866 is an eventful one in the history of the College, for the examinations were then first started. At the first examination, in July, 1866, seven candidates entered, of whom only two satisfied the examiners, Messrs. E. J. Hopkins, John Hullah and Dr. Steggall. On the next occasion, January, 1867, the result was better, as four of the six examinees passed, one of them being Mr. J. F. Bridge; the In July of that examiners were the same as before. year all the five candidates failed because of their lack of theoretical knowledge. The examinations took place in the vestry of St. Michael's, Cornhill, of which church, it will be remembered, Limpus was organist.

During the first four years of the existence of the College its headquarters had the same number of addresses-Freemasons' Tavern; Shrewsbury House, Isleworth; 145, Walworth Road; and 41, Queen Square, Bloomsbury—all these, except the first-named, being the private residences, in succession, of the founder and honorary secretary, Mr. R. D. Limpus. The removal to Queen Square, in December, 1868, prompted considerable development in the scope and operations of the College. The Report of 1869-70 under Mr. Limpus's roof.

To return to the chronological sequence of events, department was proposed, according to the following LIST OF PROFESSORS.

Arrangements are now completed whereby Instruction on the Organ, also in Harmony and Composition, can be afforded to students who may desire it. An Organ of three manuals has been erected by the Honorary Treasurer and Secretary, and obligingly placed at the disposal of the Council for that purpose.

The following is a list of the Professors, whose terms may

Mr. George Cooper. Mr. James Coward. Dr. Steggall. For the Organ. Mr. W. H. Adams. Mr. A. S. Cooper. Mr. R. Limpus. Mr. Arthur Sullivan. Mr. Charles E. Stephens. For Harmony and Dr. Steggall. Mr. James Coward. Mr. James Higgs. Composition. Mr. Henry Baumer.

Classes for the study of Harmony and Composition are in course of formation.

Arrangements can be made for Organ practice upon application to the Hon. Sec.

The Report went on to state that:

Examinations are also held in some of the chief Provincial Towns, as occasion may require, upon the same conditions as the London examinations.

Candidates passing these examinations are entitled to a Second Class Certificate, which, upon being duly signed, confers upon the holder thereof the title of Associate of the College.

These provincial examinations were held under:

Rule VIII. - That Local Boards of Examiners, consisting of not less than Two, may be appointed from among the Fellows resident in the Provinces, who shall personally examine Candidates as occasion may require, and be entitled to award certificates of the Second Class, which, upon subsequent presentation to the Examiners-in-Chief, may at their discretion be exchanged, in cases of special merit, for Certificates of the First Class.

At this time the 'Examiners-in-Chief' (in London) mentioned the opening of a music and reading-room were John Hullah, F.S.A., Dr. Steggall, and Arthur Moreover, a teaching Sullivan, and the Local Boards were thus constituted:

Manchester.	York and Newcastle.
Henry Hiles, Esq., Mus. Doc., Oxon. J. F. Bridge, Esq., Mus. Bac., Oxon.	Edwin G. Monk, Esq., Mus. Doc., Oxon. William Rea, Esq.
Birmingham.	Lichfield and Leicester.
J. Stimpson, Esq.	Thomas Bedsmore, Esq.
W. T. Belcher, Esq., Mus. Doc.	E. J. Crow, Esq.
Oxford.	Winchester, Portsmouth, and Chichester.
John Stainer, Esq., Mus. Doc., Oxon.	G. B. Arnold, Esq., Mus. Doc.
J. Hamilton Clarke, Esq., Mus. Bac., Oxon.	F. E. Gladstone, Esq. A. Godwin Fowles, Esq.
Norwich.	Canterbury.
E. Bunnett, Esq., Mus. Doc.	T. G. Jones, Esq.
————— Esq. ————— Esq.	W. H. Longhurst, Esq.

Whether any lessons were ever given at Queen Square, or any examinations were held in the provinces, it is difficult to say. Among those elected to honorary Fellowship previous to 1870 are Henry Smart, J. B. Calkin, Hamilton Clarke, Henry Hiles, A. S. Sullivan, E. Bunnett, John Stainer, E. H. Turpin, and F. E. Gladstone. The examination fee at this time (1869-70) was one guinea for members and two guineas for non-members. The total receipts for the year amounted to £108 15s. 1d., and the 'expenses' included 'Prize to Mr. J. F. Bridge, Mus. Bac.,

Los S.s. od.'

We may pass on to the year 1871, in order to refer to a pleasant function at which M. Saint-Saëns was the chief guest, as recorded in the Musical Standard of July 1, 1871:

College of Organists.—On Thursday, the 22nd ult., an examination was held, when the following gentlemen passed the necessary ordeal, and were admitted to Fellowship, viz.:—Mr. Franklin Haworth, of Birkenhead; Mr. Alfred W. Jones, of Newport; Mr. A. H. Mann, of Wolverhampton; and Mr. H. J. Stark, of Reading. On the same day Mr. S. Corbett, of Wellington, Salop, was admitted an Associate. The Board of Examiners comprised C. Steggall, Esq., Mus. Doc., Cantab.; John Stainer, Eq., Mus. Doc., Oxon.; and Charles Edward Stephens, Esq., member of the Philharmonic Society. In the evening the members and their friends were received by the Council, when a very interesting gathering took place. M. Saint-Saëns, organist of the Madeleine, Paris, was present (with other distinguished artists who honoured the Council by accepting invitations), and expressed himself highly gratified with the efforts which are being made in this country to raise the standard of organists. Mr. Arthur Sullivan in a very happy manner addressed those candidates who had been successful in passing the examination. He also offered a few kindly words of encouragement and hope to those who had this time been unsuccessful. In referring to the Society itself, he reminded his hearers that by a bond of union they would become strong, and asserted his conviction that, while the College of Organists had already done much good, it was destined hereafter to become a most useful and valuable The remarks of Mr. Arthur Sullivan, which, were listened to with the greatest attention, received frequent and hearty applause.

In 1873, if not previously, a Benevolent Fund 'for the relief of organists in distress or for their widows or children' formed part of the operations of the College. Collections in aid thereof were taken at special services held at St. Nicholas Church, Chislehurst; St. Lawrence's, Reading; and St. John's, Leicester. At a special service held at St. Paul's Cathedral in October, 1874—when the choir numbered 500 voices and the congregation was estimated at 10,000 persons the sum of £54 9s. was collected. For some years this Benevolent Fund has ceased to exist, though doubtless there are opportunities still for the exercise of some such benefaction. The question of academic garb was raised in this year, to quote from the Musical Standard of September 12, 1874:

In compliance with a resolution unanimously passed at the last Annual General Meeting, 'That the Council be requested to take into consideration the propriety of adopting some distinctive badge of fellowship to be worn in public,' your Council have given the matter their best consideration, and after considerable discussion have resolved to adopt a badge of distinction to be worn only by Fellows of the College of Organists. The said badge to be supplied by the honorary secretary, at the sole cost of those among the Fellows desirous of wearing it. The fellowship-badge will consist of a collar with a handsomely chased medallion pendant therefrom, the designs for which have been approved, and full particulars thereof may be obtained on application to Mr. Limpus, your honorary secretary.

The founder and first honorary secretary, Mr. R. D. In conclusion, I suggest there are few difficulties in the Limpus, died, aged fifty, at 41, Queen Square, way of performance. Bach's cantatas are now published—Bloomsbury, on March 15, 1875. Previous to the interment of his remains in Norwood Cemetery a funeral service was held at the church of St. Georgethe-Martyr, Bloomsbury, when Mr. E. H. Turpin, his successor in the honorary secretaryship, presided at the organ. This sad event closed an important and interesting chapter in the early history of the Royal College of Organists.

BACH AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

At the Town Hall, Manchester, on October 9, Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne read a paper at the Church Congress entitled 'The Oratorio for special services in parish churches.' In the course of his remarks he specially commended Bach's cantatas for church use, on the ground of their perfect suitability and lofty aspirations. The following are some extracts from Dr. Pyne's thoughtful and well-expressed discourse:

As I am identifying the cantata specially with Bach, I must mention that he wrote a complete set, sufficient for five years—nearly three hundred in number, of which two hundred are extant. Incredible to say of that country, Germany, which has always been held up from time immemorial as the exemplar of all things artistic, compositions were neglected after his death at the St. Thomas school and church, Leipzig, and probably many were sold as waste paper.

The orchestral accompaniments to Bach's Church cantatas are of infinite variety, ranging from a simple bass, with clavier, to dimensions of some importance. The scoring is of interest. Each instrument was assigned an independent counterpoint. In plain English, there were as many real parts-not duplications, as before-as there were voices and instruments. In some cases he uses wood and organ alone; in others, strings and cembalo; occasionally, trombone, organ, and cornet (not the blatant instruments we are accustomed to, but a species of rough musette), so that the grouping was eternally varied in an orderly and systematic manner.

The form of the cantatas is as varied as the scoring. They consist of preludes, choruses, chorales, recitatives, and solo airs. But Bach constantly varied his procedure so that the music for one occasion should differ from its neighbour.

The words are no less interesting. Sometimes Bach drew directly from the Bible; sometimes he returned to the religious poetry of the 15th and 16th centuries; sometimes they were derived from three contemporaries—Franck, Neumeister of Weimar, and Picander of Leipzig. They were all somewhat cumbersome in their periods. They frequently affected heavy Alexandrines for their metre, besides being aggressively formal.

I shall now refer you to a typical example of one of Bach's cantatas, that known as 'Actus Tragicus,' or 'God's own time is the best.' It is probably designed for the mourning of some man of advanced age, one who is 'laying down the burden of the flesh,' 'full of years and honours,' resigned, yet shrinking from the last encounter. Spitta declares 'the key to the whole composition is the contrast between the spirit of the old and new dispensations.' One naturally views with suspicion this everlasting labelling and cataloguing of music; but one is bound to give you Bach's chief biographer's hint on this point. The whole cantata has a depth and intensity of expression, chiefly individual and personal. The arrangement of the literary material is most excellent. It does not wholly consist of scriptural texts and verses of hymns; indeed, in several fit and expressive thoughts, some authorities affect to recognize Bach's own hand as librettist.

The scoring is vastly interesting, with special reference to its refinement. It consists solely of organ, harpsichord, two viole di gamba, two flauti traversi, and two bassi. These instruments are not changed for others during the whole cantata, and they impart a poetic, muted, and dreamy effect quite unique. This quality is most apparent in the calm, placid prelude, called by Bach a sonatina, in which some fragments of future material are anticipated.

enough of them to last for years. The words, re-arranged, are of considerable literary merit and beauty, and I maintain that the delicacy of accompaniments, the unusual combination, the tonal groupings, the crystalline outlines and clear form of the works in general, would surely not only be a corrective to the somewhat melodramatic style now in vogue, but also be a training of the greatest value to our general public, who in the main have an excellent taste, and are willing and ready to be taught.

In addition to all this, musical education has now reached such a pitch that there are many competent musical students, and even some amateurs, who would rejoice in the opportunity of assisting in the small orchestra, and in this way helping forward the possibility of a revival in a glorified form of the old municipal orchestra that might be of the greatest use in our Church.

Dr. A. Madeley Richardson read a paper on the same subject. As to the use of oratorios in parish churches, our guiding principle, he said, should be that whatever was done should be done in the best possible way, and that nothing should be undertaken that could not be fully and efficiently carried out.

The musical illustrations to Dr. Pyne's paper consisted of Bach's cantata 'God's time is the best' (complete), and (as an illustration of 'thin scoring') the air 'My heart ever faithful,' in addition to the chorale 'O Thou the true and only Light' from Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' The last-named furnished an instance of how effectively the pauses between the lines of a chorale can be instrumentally filled in, and at the same time 'exhibit all the subtle niceties of a well-regulated musical mind.' The illustrations were sung by the choir of Manchester Cathedral, accompanied by Dr. Henry Watson (harpsichord), Mr. I. Davidson (organ), Messrs. E. G. Redfern and W. Dixon (flutes), Messrs. W. Warburton and H. Holme (viol da gamba and viol d'amore), Messrs. H. Dunworth and Leo Smith (violoncellos), and Mr. G. Martin (double-bass). An illustrated syllabus and programme added to the value of an enjoyable and profitable evening, the large audience including the Bishop of Manchester, Bishop Thornton, and the Dean of Manchester (Bishop Welldon).

CHOIR SERMONS.

A special musical service, entitled as above, was held on Sunday evening, September 27, at Albion Congregational Church, Ashton-under-Lyne. Its chief feature was a performance of Elgar's 'The Kingdom' (omitting Parts 2 and 3), sung by the well-trained choir of the church, numbering fifty voices, under the direction of the organist and choirmaster, Dr. Thomas Keighley, who accompanied the work on the organ. The Rev. J. Nicholas Knight, minister of the church, gave three short addresses on the subject of the oratorio so beautifully rendered, and the soloists were Mrs. E. D. Grierson, Mrs. T. Pashley, Mr. J. Taylor and Mr. James Jackson. In recording this service, which formed part of the choir anniversary, the local magazine of the church said: 'Thus quietly and unostentatiously our choir celebrated its anniversary by the successful interpretation of a work which is at once the fascination and the fear of all church choirs. That Albion Church Choir felt the fascination in such a way as to be saved from the fear, is due to the patience taken by Dr. Keighley and the pains taken by his devoted helpers.'

A series of five organ recitals has been inaugurated during the past month at Windsor Parish Church, with a view to making up a slight deficit in the organ fund. Performances have already been given by Sir Walter Parratt, Dr. H. Walford Davies, and Mr. H. Wharton-Wells, organist of the Parish Church, Putney. Dr. C. H. Lloyd, and Mr. Albert Mellor, organist of the church, are announced to give the remaining recitals.

TEWKESBURY ABBEY.

This grand old building (of which an illustrated account appeared in The MUSICAL TIMES of March, 1904) was the scene of a one-day musical festival on September 21. Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' (Praise Jehovah) was sung under the careful direction of Mr. Alfred W. V. Vine, organist of the church, and Mr. Ivor Atkins conducted a performance of his well-written church cantata the 'Hymn of Faith.' The choir, numbering 200 voices, was supplied from the festival choirs of Gloucester, Worcester and Tewkesbury, and an orchestra of fifty performers was led by Mr. W. H. Reed, of London. At the two organs were Dr. A. Herbert Brewer and Mr. Atkins, organists respectively of Gloucester and Worcester Cathedrals; and the principal vocalists were Madame Le Mar, Miss Jessie King, Mr. A. Watson (St. George's Chapel, Windsor), and Mr. H. Finch (Gloucester Cathedral). In the evening the abbey was crowded at an organ recital given by Mr. Vine, in co-operation with the abbey choir, Miss Melville-Bergheim, Miss Jessie King, and Mr. A. Watson (vocalists), and Mr. C. W. Teague, violoncellist.

CHORAL FESTIVALS.

The Three Choirs Festival of Winchester, Salisbury, and Chichester Cathedrals was held at Chichester on September 30. The service-music included the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis to Stainer's setting in B flat, and the anthems 'O clap your hands' (Greene), 'Who is like unto thee?' (Sullivan), 'When Israel out of Egypt came' (S. Wesley), and 'Ascribe unto the Lord' (S. S. Wesley). The duties of organist were shared by Dr. Prendergast, organist of Winchester Cathedral, Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, organist of Chichester Cathedral (who conducted the unaccompanied anthems), and Mr. W. H. H. Lambert, assistant-organist at Chichester. At the Harvest Oratorio Serviceheld at Chichester Cathedral on October 15, Haydn's 'Creation' (Parts 1 and 2) and Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' symphony were performed under the direction of Mr. F. J. W. Crowe. The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. W. A. Baker) numbered about 200 performers, and Mr. E. Stephenson, organist of Birmingham Cathedral, ably presided at the organ.

The Ledbury Triennial Musical Festival was held in Ledbury Church on October 8, when Sir Hubert Parry's 'Voces Clamantium' was performed under the composer's direction, in addition to Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, conducted by Mr. Tom Woodward. The orchestra numbered forty-eight performers, and the chorus, the Ledbury Musical Festival Society, consisted of seventy voices. The soloists were Madame Le Mar, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. James Coleman, and Mr. H. M. Goodacre was at the organ.

At the annual choral festival held at St. Edward's Church, Romford, on October 15, the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to 'Tours in F,' and the anthems were 'O how amiable' (John E. West) and 'The strain upraise' (Sullivan), Barnby's Te Deum in B flat being sung as a recessional. The choirs who took part in the service were those of St. Edward's; St. Andrew's; St. John's; St. Alban's; All Saints', Squirrels Heath; and Hornchurch. Mr. H. Disney (of St. Andrew's Church) was at the organ, and Mr. M. Kingston conducted.

NEW ORGANS.

The new organ in the Town Hall, Walsall, erected at a cost of £2,300 as a memorial to Queen Victoria, was opened on October 1, when a recital was given by Mr. C. W. Perkins, organist of Birmingham Town Hall, under whose supervision the instrument has been constructed.

Messrs. P. Connacher & Co. have built the new organ in Huddersfield Parish Church. It was dedicated on September 24, when Sir Walter Parratt gave two recitals. Owing to great pressure on our space, the specification of the instrument must be withheld until next month.

The opening of the Ely Cathedral organ, on October 13, also by Sir Walter Parratt, is specially noticed on p. 707.

'The Choristers' own book' is the title of a little volume that justifies its publication. Compiled by Anna Maria Butler, and dedicated to the Dean of St. Paul's, its ninetyfive pages are homiletical, historical, and biographical, concluding with a useful list of 'Some of the principal church musicians in England and Ireland from 1520 to the present time, drawn up by Mr. John S. Bumpus. The book is one that may be commended for presentation to choristers, who will doubtless smile when they read the 'few extracts from the Statutes of Wells Cathedral, A.D. 1460, regarding the care of choristers' (p. 42). The publisher of 'The Choristers' own book,' is Mr. Frank H. Morland, 16, Park Mansions, Fulham.

At the quarterly meeting of the Winchester and district Association of Organists, held at Winchester on October 6, Mr. E. W. Savage, the vice-president, read a thoughtful paper on 'The church organist: his influence with choir and congregation.'

The lay-clerks of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, have been exempted from serving on juries on the ground that, as servants of the King, they attended services in the private chapel at the Castle and were paid out of the privy purse.

At the church of St. Peter-upon-Cornhill-of which the Rev. G. B. Doughty is the rector-Maunder's 'Song of Thanksgiving' was sung at the 357th recital, on October 20. Mr. Frank C. Dainty was at the organ, and Mr. Joseph T. Smith, organist of the church, conducted.

MENDELSSOHN'S 'WALPURGIS NIGHT.'

BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

'The First Walpurgis Night, Ballad for Chorus* and Orchestra, the words by Goethe, composed by Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy'—such is the translation of the German title of this composition. The night between April 30 and May 1 is in Germany called the Walpurgis-night, as being dedicated to Walpurga, or Werburga, a British saint, sister of S. Boniface the Apostle of Germany. In the popular tradition it is supposed to be the night on which great festivals of devils and witches are held on the mountains of the One such on the Brocken or Blocksberg mountain forms a part of Goethe's 'Faust.' The title of 'First Walpurgis Night'-Goethe's own designation in the present case—probably expresses his intention to expose in this poem how the popular superstition arose out of the use by the old heathens, as masquerade or stratagem, of that which afterwards remained as a fixed belief. The poem, as describing the first occurrence of the kind, would be rightly called 'The First Walpurgis Night.

The composition of the music doubtless originated in Mendelssohn's visit to Goethe, when on his road to Italy in May and June, 1830. True, he does not mention it in either of the three published letters relating to that visit, but he states that he began to compose it shortly after he left Weimar; by the beginning of the following April it was sufficiently matured in his mind for him to begin to write it down, and by the end of the month he talks of it as practically complete. On March 29, 1831, he says: 'I have laid aside the Scotch Symphony for the present, but hope to write down the Walpurgis Night here (Rome). I shall manage to do so if I work hard to-day and to-morrow, and if we have bad weatherfor really a fine day is too great a temptation. As soon as an impediment occurs, I try to find some resource in the open air, so I go out and think of anything and everything but my composition, and do nothing but lounge about, and when the church bells begin to ring it is the Ave Maria again. All I want now is a short overture. If I can accomplish this the thing is complete, and I can write it out in a couple of days. Then I shall leave all my music and music-paper here and go off to Naples.' Again, two months later-'I hope to finish my Walpurgis Night in a few days, and think it will turn out well. . . . This whole letter seems hovering in uncertainty, or rather I am myself, as to whether or not I shall put the big drum into my Walpurgis Night. "Zacken, Gabeln, und wilde Klapperstöcke," seems to force me to the big drum, but moderation dissuades me. I certainly am the only person who ever composed for the scene on the Brocken without employing a piccolo flute, but I can't help regretting the big drum, and before I can receive Fanny's advice the Walpurgis Night will be finished and packed up.'

Alas, however, for the difficulties of a fastidious composer-a very Herod towards his own offspring, as Mendelssohn often was. May and June passed, and on July 14 we find him at Milan, on his road home, still at his task, 'hiring a square piano and attacking with rabbia that endless Walpurgis Night, to finish the thing at last. To-morrow it shall really be completed except the overture — this begins to be interesting—'I have not quite made up my mind whether it shall be a grand symphony or a short introduction breathing of Spring.' And completed it then was; for the autograph manuscript is dated by himself '15th July, 1831.' The overture, however, still hangs fire. Mozart's son has heard the work on the piano, and his delight has given Mendelssohn a new impulse. But Switzerland came, and the Alps, and the valleys, and deluges of rain, and organs in little mountain churches, and pretty girls, and sketching, and Lucerne and the Righi, and then Munich and the G minor Concerto—and no wonder that the 'Saxon Overture' was put aside. We hear nothing more of it till January 21, 1832, when, in the middle of all the delightful excitements of Paris—the rehearsals, the concerts, the parties, and all the resthe tells his sister that he is again at work at his Saxon Overture which is to precede the Walpurgis Night, that it may be played at a concert in Berlin to be given on his return. This time, too, it really was finished, for the date upon it is '13th Feb., 1832.'

During this interval Mendelssohn seems to have

During this interval Mendelssohn seems to have communicated with Goethe, to judge from the extract of a letter from the poet, on the intention of his poem, dated Sept. 9, 1831, and printed on page 1 of the English edition of the vocal score of the work, and which may be rendered as follows: 'This poem is in the strictest sense one of high symbolic import. For in the history of the world it must be a thing of perpetual recurrence that an ancient, tried, established, tranquilising order of things should by emergent innovations be pressed, and driven and hoisted out of its place, and if not utterly destroyed, be yet closely penned within the narrowest limits. The intermediate period, in which the hatred of innovation has still the power and the will to offer opposition, is in this poem is presented in a sufficiently suggestive way, and a juyous indestructible enthusiasm once more flames upwards clear and bright.'

And so the work appears to have remained—as the Italian Symphony, born like it under the southern skies, remained—till November, 1840, when, stimulated by the success of the Lobgesang (Hymn of Praise), Mendelssohn tells his friend Klingemann, in London, that not only has he announced the 'Lobgesang' on K.'s suggestion as a 'Sinfonie-cantata,' but that he has serious thoughts of resuming the 'First Walpurgis Night'—so long laid by—under the same cognomen, and really finishing and getting rid of it at last. And then he gives a little glimpse into the history of the piece which is interesting enough. 'It is curious that when the thing first occurred to me I wrote to Berlin that I wanted to write a choral symphony. My courage afterwards failed me, because the three movements seemed too long for an introduction; and yet I could never get rid of the feeling that something more was wanted than a mere introduction. Now, I shall put in the three movements according to my old plan, and then the piece shall come out.' Not so, however; the 'Walpurgis Night' was not destined to satisfy its author yet for a long while. We pass two years and among the first letters we possess after the death of his mother is one dated Leipsic, January 13, 1843, and addressed to the same dear friend as before, showing that he is hard at work re-scoring the whole of the instrumental parts. 'I often can't move from the table for hours together, so riveted am I by the pleasant company of my old friends the oboes and tenors and all the rest of them, who will live far longer than any of us.' This was really the last redaction.

On February 2, 1843, at the sixteenth Gewandhaus concert of that season, the vessel which had been on the stocks for a dozen years was actually launched, and the world was at last in possession of the 'Walpurgis Night.' Berlioz arrived for the first time in Leipsic during the rehearsal, and has left his hearty satisfaction on record in a letter to Stephen Heller, in phrases which do him honour, printed in his autobiographical memoirs. The publication took place shortly afterwards. In England it was first publicly performed at the Philharmonic concert of July 8, 1844, for the first actual performance was a private one, on June 14, at the house of Mr. Hullah, Mendelssohn himself playing the accompaniment with Moscheles as his companion in the overture.

The opening of the work after all differs materially from that of the 'Hymn of Praise.' That consists of an introduction and three movements formed on the usual model of the movements of a symphony; this—though with important modifications—is more in the form prescribed for an overture. Mendelssohn has fortunately told us what he intends by it: it is inscribed Schlechtes Wetter, and is meant to represent the uncertain blowing April weather that directly precedes Spring, with the first burst of which the vocal part of the cantata opens.

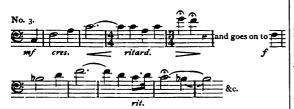

It is in A minor and commences at a furious pace, Allegro con fuoco, with the following melody, accompanied by the rushing and driving of the violas and violoncellos:

To this succeeds a second theme, or perhaps more accurately an episode, given out by the first violins and oboes, and then developed at length in an agitated manner by the violins:

marked by a passage of melody, a quasi recitative in the bassoons and horns alone, containing a prediction of the phrase which announces the Spring further on in the movement. It commences as follows:

after which the movement resumes its swing. At length the 'bad weather' would seem to have spent itself, and the change to Spring—Uebergang zum Frühling—is heralded by the clarinets (Mendelssohn's favourite embodiment of fine weather) in this bright and May-like phrase:

followed a little later, when the Spring itself arrives, by the well-known melody which afterwards opens the vocal portion:

and seems to blow the very gales of May in our faces.

[To Sir George Grove's analysis may be added: (i.) The Berlioz extract to which he refers; (ii.) A copy of the programme of the Philharmonic concert at which the 'Walpurgis Night' was first publicly performed, with William Bartholomew's English version, in this country.—ED. M. T.]

Berlioz says:

I am much inclined to look upon this oratorio "La Nuit du Sabbat') as the most finished work* Mendelssohn has hitherto produced. The poem is Goethe's, but has nothing in common with the Sabbat scene in 'Faust.' . . .

You must hear Mendelssohn's music in order to have an idea of the varied resources the poem offers to a skilled composer. He has profited immensely by them. His work is perfectly clear, notwithstanding its complexity; the vocal and instrumental effects are marvellously intermingled in an apparent confusion that is the very acme of art. Two magnificent features, in absolute contrast, are the mysterious piece of the placing of the sentinels ('Disperse, disperse'), and the final chorus where the voice of the priest rises calm and reverent at intervals above the infernal din of the mock demons and sorcerers. One scarcely knows what to praise most in this Finale, the instrumentation, the choruses, or the whirlwind movement of the whole.

Just as Mendelssohn was leaving his desk, in the utmost delight at having produced this work, I came forward in rapture at having heard it. The meeting could not have been better timed; and yet, after we

When I wrote this I had not heard the fascinating score of his 'Midsummer Night's Dream.

The end of the first division of the movement is had exchanged the first greeting, the same sad thought struck us both simultaneously:

'And is it twelve years? twelve years since we dreamed together on the plains of Rome?'
'Yes, and in the baths of Caracalla.'

'Ah! always joking! always ready to laugh at me!' 'No, no; I hardly ever jest now; it was only to prove your memory and see if you had forgiven all my impieties. I jest so little that at our very first interview I am going seriously to ask you to make me a present, to which I shall attach the highest value. What is that?'

'Give me the baton with which you have just conducted the rehearsal of your new work.'

'Willingly, on condition that you send me yours.' 'I shall be giving copper for gold; but never mind, I consent.'

And Mendelssohn's musical sceptre was brought to me forthwith. The next day I sent him my heavy oaken staff, together with the following letter, which I think would not have been disowned by the Last of the Mohicans himself:

'TO THE CHIEF MENDELSSOHN!

'Great chief! We have promised to exchange tomahawks. Mine is a rough one — yours is plain. Only squaws and pale-faces are fond of ornate weapons. Be my brother! and when the Great Spirit shall have sent us to hunt in the land of souls, may our warriors hang up our tomahawks together at the door of the council-chamber.'*

Reviews.

English Traditional Songs and Carols. Collected and edited, with annotations and pianoforte accompaniments, by Lucy E. Broadwood.

[Boosey & Co.]

The association of Miss Broadwood with folk-song is of long standing. She was one of the first of that small group of modern collectors who, twenty years ago, recognised that there was 'something in' the native songs of the English rustic singer.

Therefore any contribution she makes to the subject, either as a collector or by way of commentary, has that hall-mark of knowledge which few workers possess. Since, in collaboration with Mr. Fuller Maitland, she issued 'English County Songs,' Miss Broadwood, as honorary secretary of the Folk-Song Society, has been so busy directing the energies of others, as to prevent her from giving to the world anything from her store of traditional melodies arranged for popular use. Her untiring efforts have always been in the way of encouraging the gathering of the yet ungarnered folk-song. Her zeal in this direction has borne rich fruit, for her own personality has been the cause of much of the recent work done in collecting, and of the growing interest taken in our really national song.

In the collection under notice, considerable value has been added to the book by an appendix consisting of valuable notes which deal with the historical aspect of the songs contained in the first part. Here Miss Broadwood's careful researches and 'level-headed' theories have kept her from that wild domain of vague conjecture, random assertion, and romantic untruth which is so apt to entrap the enthusiast. The preface contains some pertinent remarks on the subject of folk-song, and one or two truths hitherto unrecorded. She tells us that, in a way, the manufacture of folk-song still goes on among those where it originated in earlier days, and justly points out that it is more particularly noticeable among the eloquent Celtic peasantry of Scotland, Ireland and Wales than elsewhere in our own country. 'The more reticent and slow-tongued Englishman of limited education,' she asserts, 'not unfrequently makes tunes, and verses, of a kind.' She has meti with several instances of this and recalls that, as a child, she was privileged to read the Valentines and rhymed letters made by a friendly Sussex bard for his less poetical friends.

The bulk of the tunes in the collection were noted down from south country singers, and of these the carols are especially curious. One very noticeable example is 'King Pharaoh,' noted from a gang of gipsies wandering through Sussex and Surrey. Others are as sung by Hampshire and by Sussex mummers. An excellent tune is fitted to the song 'Boney's lamentation,' one of those ballad-sheet effusions which date from the days when Bonaparte, his schemes, his misfortunes, and triumphs were themes that appealed most strongly to the ballad-monger and his clientèle. The tune in question is a charming modal version of the well-known 'Arethusa' air, so frequently and so falsely attributed to William Shield. Miss Broadwood has failed to notice the similarity between it and 'Balquidder lasses,' a tune from a Scotch gipsy piper, printed in No. 9 of the 'Folk-Song Journal.' Many a pretty theory might hang on suggestive points of resemblance between these tunes and the printed 'Arethusa.'

A fine old tune to 'Death and the Lady'—that most moral of folk ditties—comes from Sussex, and, what is still more wonderful, a complete traditional set of the words, extending to twenty-three verses! The pathetic and eerie 'Unquiet grave' is also here; and two versions of 'Belfast Mountains' and 'The Irish Girl,' though from the English southern counties, may be claimed for Irish birth. whole book contains between thirty and forty folk-songs of considerable interest, and for the furtherance of popularising folk-song, a shilling edition having only the airs (in both notations) with the words is also to be obtained.

FRANK KIDSON.

PART-SONGS.

Let the bells ring. Justice. By Joseph W. G. Hathaway. The three fishers. By Oliver King. Young Herchard. By Rutland Boughton. Stars of the summer night. By Havergal Brian.

Now is my Chloris fresh as May. By Frank Idle.

Who rides for the King? By Reginald Somerville.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The two part-songs by Dr. Hathaway are excellent examples of modern choral writing. The first is a setting of words by John Fletcher, the spirit of which has been happily caught by the composer. 'Justice,' is of more complicated character. Dedicated to Sir Edward Elgar, it is in eight parts, which are intended to be sung unaccompanied, and it formed one of the test-pieces at the recent Morecambe musical festival. The text, by George Herbert, compares the fear of justice in olden days with the confidence begotten of the Advent of Christ. The music is dramatically conceived, and contains some highly effective passages. The parts individually are easy to read, but demand strict adherence to time and close attention to gradation of tone. These being forthcoming, the part-song would prove very impressive—as it did at Morecambe.

Even though it might be thought that another setting of Kingsley's familiar poem, 'The three fishers,' is scarcely needed, Mr. Oliver King has brought so much freshness of idea and musicianly skill to his task that the result fully justifies the attempt. The setting is in the form of a ballad for chorus and orchestra, and the vocal part-writing requires well-trained singers to do it justice; but these being provided, the part-song would be very effective.

'Young Herchard' is an arrangement in the form of choral variations, by Mr. Rutland Boughton, upon the familiar English folk-song. While treated in a most cholarly manner, the corporary has preserved the human. scholarly manner, the composer has preserved the humour and humanity of the amusing old ballad.

Longfellow's poem, 'Stars of the summer night,' has been set by Mr. Havergal Brian as an eight-part chorus to be sung unaccompanied. It will be found interesting alike to singers and listeners, and moreover provides an excellent study for delicate choral singing.

Mr. Frank Idle has allied the pastoral lines by Thomas Weelkes to strains instinct with the spirit of Spring, and his music is quite fascinating in its infectious gaiety.

'Who rides for the King?' by Mr. Reginald Somerville, is a spirited part-song that stirs the pulse, words and music being alike replete with the exuberant loyalty and gay boldness associated with the robust spirit of the cavaliers of good King Charles's days.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Nocturne (Op. 54, No. 5). Sphinz (Op. 63). By Cyril Scott. Air and Fughetta in the old style. By Cecil Hazlehurst.

[Elkin & Co.]

The first of these pieces is extremely graceful, and does not present any difficulties beyond the abilities of the average pianist, but the second requires a more courageous attack, the composer apparently seeking to justify the title of his piece by his harmonic scheme. The composition belongs to the modern impressionist school, and to admirers of such it will doubtless appeal, for it is decidedly clever and capable of being made expressive. The 'Air and Fughetta' are both short and effective little pieces, as interesting to play as

ANTHEMS.

I will magnify Thee. By Arthur W. Marchant. Abide with me. By Ivor Atkins.
O God, Whose nature. Not unto us, O Lord. By T. S. [Novello & Co., Ltd.] Dupuis.

Dr. Marchant's anthem is intended for harvest festivals and other thanksgiving services and, as will be surmised, is of a jubilant character. It opens with a vigorous chorus, which is succeeded by a short baritone solo that forms a kind of connecting link with a massive choral conclusion. The music is melodious and well within the capabilities of an ordinary choir.

Lyte's familiar evening hymn, 'Abide with me,' would Ec seem to have an irresistible attraction to composers. The latest to ally it with music is Mr. Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral, and his setting is another proof of his musicianship. The part-writing is distinguished by melodic independence, and the change of sentiment in the verses is effectively reflected in the music.

Both of the anthems composed by Dr. T. S. Dupuis have been carefully edited by Mr. John E. West, who, r. s while correcting certain errors in the original edition, has siz conscientiously preserved these mistakes in small notes. 'O God, Whose nature' is written in five parts, the voices including first and second tenors. The music, which is of course contrapuntal in character, is by no means complex and will be found easy to read. The other anthem by this composer is similar in character, but it is in four vocal parts, which are distinguished by dignity and solidity of harmonic effects.

Richard Strauss. By Ernest Newman, with a personal note by Alfred Kalisch, and eleven illustrations. 'Living Masters of Music,' edited by Rosa Newmarch.

[John Lane.]

Compared with criticism, biography takes a subsidiary place in this ably-written monograph upon a much-discussed composer of the present day. Of its 144 pages, only . 5 twenty-eight are devoted to the life-story; to these must be added the thirteen pages concerning 'Richard Strauss: the man,' contributed by Mr. Kalisch. The chief value of the book, therefore, consists in its critical subject-matter. Mr. Ernest Newman has earned for himself the title of hero-worshipper in a biography associated with his name. In the present instance, however, he wisely adopts an 'independent critical attitude' in discussing the merits and demerits of Dr. Strauss's music. The chapter entitled later instrumental works' is particularly interesting and valuable. Though Mr. Newman admires 'the intellectual energy and the technical skill' of the 'battle' section of Ein Heldenleben,' he considers it 'a blatant and hideous piece of work'; and in regard to the 'Symphonia Domestica, 3D 5while he admits that 'it has its great and uplifted moments,' he is of opinion that 'the instrumental colour is grossly overdone; the polyphony is often coarse and sprawling; and the realistic effects in the score are at once so atrociously ugly and so pitiably foolish that one listens to them with regret that a composer of genius should ever have fallen so low.' On the other hand, Mr. Newman says: 'Strauss is in reality one of the great master-builders.' These quotations will serve to show that this little book furnishes much food for thought on the subject of modern music. Considering the reputation of the author, it is hardly necessary to say that the volume is one that, if only for its literary style, is sure to attract many readers.

NEW SONGS.

When my lady sings. For baritone. The trysting tree. For contralto. By W. H. Walthew. I heard a soldier. For baritone. By Joseph Holbrooke. 63 l A remembrance. For contralto or baritone. By Caroline [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Gracefulness is seldom absent from Mr. Walthew's songs. pleasingly amorous poem by D. Donaldson, the music to which echoes the complacent fervency of the lyric. The same poet has supplied the text to 'The trysting tree,' beneath which a lady waits for her lover who cometh not. The song sounds a deeper note, which is faithfully echoed in the nusic, and the suggestion of the uncanny in the final lines:

> 'Moon, why smile you so strangely Over the trysting tree?'

is effectively emphasised by the composer. Baritones with dramatic instinct will find a highly effective song in Mr. Holbrooke's setting of Herbert Trench's 'I heard a soldier.' Well vocalised, the song would hold the attention of an audience in any concert room. 'Remembrance,' the words by Caroline Maude (Viscountess Hawarden), is a simple ditty M. Massenet.

breathing faithful memory of one who apparently loved mankind. The music is unpretentious but melodious and gracious, and the voice part is admirably supported by the pianoforte accompaniment.

Ev'ry kiss is a song. (La Mélodie des baisers.) French words by André Alexandre. English version by R. H. Elkin. Music by J. Massenet.

In a fairy boat. Words by Bernard Weller. A Serenade. Words by Ruffield Bendall. Music by Cyril Scott.

What's in the air to-day? Words and music by Robert [Élkin & Co.]

Mr. Massenet's song treats of a delicate subject in a dainty manner, and provides vocalists with light voices and refined style with a congenial medium for their abilities. The two songs by Mr. Cyril Scott present this young composer in a favourable light. Some of the harmonies are rather far fetched and call for a light touch, but the music possesses originality without eccentricity, and sympathetically rendered the lyrics would charm cultured listeners. The last song in the above list is a joyous ditty of springtime and love, with music as gay as the words.

Short Setting of the Holy Communion in F. By Arthur E. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

To the excellent and useful series of Communion Services edited by Sir George C. Martin, Mr. Arthur E. Godfrey has contributed a setting in F which well merits attention. music is not only devotional in spirit but combines musicianly skill with melodious expression. The voice parts will be found easy to read and interesting, and the organ accompaniment, while such as to inspire confidence in the singers, possesses considerable independence. Mr. Godfrey has supplied two settings for the Kyrie, three offertory sentences, and music for the Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, Pater Noster, and Gloria in Excelsis, and concludes this short service with an impressive two-fold Amen.

BRISTOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

All the musical festivals held in the West of England are conducted by local musicians: at Bristol and Gloucester by natives of those cities. I draw no conclusions from these interesting conditions, but merely state the fact. Certain it is that the twelfth Bristol Musical Festival—Colston Hall, October 14-17—proved that there was no need to go beyond the city to secure a thoroughly efficient conductor. This was Mr. Riseley's fourth festival, and the fact that he is his own chorus-master has not a little to do with the success which again attended his efforts and added to his reputation as a festival conductor. To Mr. W. J. Kidner, the indefatigable secretary and business manager, I shall subsequently refer.

No fewer than twenty-three principal vocalists were engaged; and as the festival orchestra, ably led by Messrs. A. W. Payne and T. H. Morrison, consisted of ninety performers, mostly members of the London Symphony Orchestra, there was no lack of efficiency in that important department. Mr. G. Herbert Riseley is to be commended for his artistic and effective use of the organ, which was never allowed to assert itself.

The choir consisted of 400 voices, distributed thus:

					Total	400
Bass	•	•	-	•	•	95
Tenor	-	•	•	•	•	80
Alto	-	-	-	-	•	115
Sopra	10	•	•	-	-	110

In judging this choral force it is unfair to make a tonal comparison with Yorkshire singers. If Bristolians are not by nature endowed with sonorous and penetrating voices, they have refinement of tone, a qualification which, combined with warmth of expression, clear enunciation, and delicate phrasing, results in an artistic whole fully meriting commendation. The only defect, and it is certainly worth mentioning, was the apparent strain of the sopranos in getting their high notes, due no doubt to the high pitch to which the organ in Colston Hall is unfortunately tuned.

The performances began on Wednesday morning, October 14, with the National Anthem, followed by Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' which, with one exception, has found a place at every previous festival. There is no need to give details of a rendering in which every one concerned took infinite pains. As at Worcester, there was a tendency to rush some of the choruses, whereby something was lost of their impressiveness, otherwise nothing but praise is justly due. The principal soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Dalton Baker; Mesdames Eveline Gerrish and Clara Aldersley, Messrs. Wensley and W. Thomas co-operating in the concerted numbers, while the part of the Youth was well sung by Master Sidney Moore, a chorister of Temple Church, Bristol, and trained by Mr. Fothergill, the organist.

The first novelty of the festival opened the evening concert, the work being a setting by Sir Charles Stanford of Tennyson's 'Ode on the death of the Duke of Wellington,' in the form of a cantata for soprano and baritone soli, chorus and orchestra. Whatever may be the literary merits of the Wellington Ode, it is hardly one that would be calculated to inspire a composer to the extent that 'The Revenge' so eminently succeeded in doing, especially as the interest of its subject-matter has to a certain degree evaporated. But Sir Charles Stanford has certainly made the most of the opportunities afforded by the words, in clothing them with music that strikingly reflects the character of the poem. Two quotations are most happily introduced, one from the 'Dead March in Saul,' the other from the anthem 'If we believe that Jesus died,' composed by Goss for the funeral of the Iron Duke. The solos were well sung by Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Plunket Greene, and the composer, who conducted, was heartily applauded at the close of an excellent performance of his work.

The remainder of the programme, being of a miscellaneous character and consisting of familiar things, may speak for itself:

Aria Dalla sua pace (Don Giovanni) Mr. John McCormack.	••	Mozart.
Concerto in D (Op. 77) for violin and orchestra Herr FRITZ KREISLER.	••	Brahms.
Aria Martern aller Arten (Il Seraglio) Miss Agnes Nicholles.	•••	Mozart.

Song Flower Song (Carmen) Mr. JOHN McCormack.	••	Bizet.
Songs of the Sea (for baritone and male chorus) Conducted by the Composer. Mr. PLUNKET GREENE.	••	Stanford.

Thursday morning's performance opened with Max Bruch's 'The Lay of the Bell.' First performed in England at the Birmingham Festival of 1879, the work has not become very popular in this country. It occupies an hour and three-quarters in performance, and is apt to become wearisome by the nature of its Teutonic length. The cantata contains some pleasant music, but it lacks sustained interest. 'Kapell-meister music' is a term which, with all respect, may be assigned to it, and the remark of a distinguished critic that he 'preferred Romberg to Max Bruch, if only for length,' was more or less justified. The choir sang well, as did the soloists, Mesdames Emily Squire and Kirkby Lunn, Messrs. Lloyd Chandos and Dalton Baker.

After the interval came one of the pleasantest moments of the festival in the rendering of the beautiful G minor Symphony of Basil Sergeivitch Kalinnikoff, a composer who died in 1901 at the early age of thirty-five, after a life of struggle and misery. In listening to this charming symphony, one could hardly realize that its neglected creator lived in so distressful a country as Russia. Its ear-enchanting melodies seemed as though they had been inspired by the fields and flowers, the hedgerows and the song of birds in a county like Hertfordshire, for instance, so happy, so refreshing were its grateful strains. That the work will speedily find its way into many an orchestral répertoire is a matter of certainty. Would that some of our young English composers could write music as coherent, as melodious, and as concise as Kalinnikoff's Symphony in G minor.

As one who was fortunate in being present at the Bach concert given by the students of the Royal College of Music in July last year, when the church cantata, 'Watch ye, pray ye,' received an excellent rendering, I was very glad to renew acquaintance with this fine work at Bristol, when it concluded the Thursday morning's performance. The impressions which I recorded in The Musical Times of August, 1907 (p. 541) of this remarkable creation of the great Cantor were fully confirmed and deepened by the rendering under Mr. Riseley's baton, though there were one or two moments when the music did not appeal to me with quite so much power as it did at Kensington. One would like to have an opportunity of hearing the work in a church for which it was written and for which it is eminently suitable, especially at the season of Advent. At the Bristol performance the soloists were Mesdames Emily Squire and Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Dalton Baker, and Sir Charles Stanford perfectly supplied, at the pianoforte, the continuo part which forms so important a feature in Bach's church cantatas.

Local influence'! How much a festival may be marred by that insidious element. Not so at Bristol, however, in the new cantata composed by a native of the city, Mr. Cyril Bradley Rootham, a son of Mr. D. Wilberforce Rootham, one of the most respected musicians of Bristol. This cantata, produced on Thursday evening (Octoler 15), is a setting of Charles Kingsley's poem 'Andromeda.' As an outline of the work was given in The MUSICAL TIMES of September last, there is no need to tread-the same ground again. The impression which the music produced has only to be recorded. In so doing, I must first congratulate Mr. Rootham upon having composed a work which gave great pleasure, by its conception, its melodiousness, its workmanship, and its conciseness. Not that he has reached the Parnassus heights of perfection—he would be the first to deny that he had attained thereunto—but he has brought forth a work that, to say the least of it, does him great credit, one that should encourage him to further efforts in the same sane direction. For vocal part-writing, restraint in handling the orchestra, and a poetic conception of Kingsley's lines, the work distinctly merits high praise, and this is unreservedly accorded him. That 'Andromeda' pleased the large audience was evident by the heartiness with which they cheered the young composer at the close of the performance. The choir evidently took the greatest pains in singing the portion assigned to them in their fellow-citizen's cantata, and the work had the advantage of the co-operation of Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Madame Clara Butt, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford in the solo parts, with Mr. Riseley as conductor.

The remainder of the programme consisted of Elgar's popular cantata 'King Olaf,' with Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Charles Knowles as principals. The dramatic nature of the work forcibly appealed to the choir, who sang their part with enthusiasm. Expectation ran high on Friday morning by the report that the 'Passion' Music of Felix Woyrsch was 'one of the greatest works of the century'! Whoever may hold that opinion, it is quite certain that, after hearing Herr Woyrsch's setting of one of the momentous events in the history of the world, there is no fear of Bach's being dethroned from his pinnacle of fame. Bach is unapproached and unapproachable in his treatment of this solemn subject. At the same time credit must be given to Herr Woyrsch-born in 1860 and now an organist and choral conductor at Altona-for his sincerity of purpose and technical skill in producing 'a work so thoroughly and essentially German (pace the programme-book); but something greater than this is needed in order to reach those sublime heights which the sacred subject demands. It would be unfair to dismiss the work without acknowledging the indebtedness of musicians to Mr. Riseley, for giving the first performance of the oratorio in England. Mention must be made of the beautiful setting, for voices alone, of the Lord's Prayer, a fine example of pure vocal writing which greeted the ear with welcome freshness amid many strains that were wearisome. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Kirkby Lunn, and Messrs. Ben Davies, Robert Radford, J. Barker, Marcus Thomson, Charles Knowles, G. Noble and William Thomas.

The ever-welcome Choral Symphony—soloists Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Charles Knowles-concluded a very long concert, the 'Passion Music' lasting just over two hours without a break.

The evening performance on Friday took the form of a miscellaneous concert, which attracted an immense audience. Here is the programme in extenso:

Overture Overture Carneval (Op. 45)

Motet for double choir In exitu Israel .. Glazounoff. .. Samuel Wesley. THE BRISTOL FESTIVAL CHOIR.

Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra in A minor (Op. 16) Grieg. Miss MILDRED PRITCHARD.

O Don Fatale (Don Carlos) Aria .. Verdi. Madame CLARA BUTT.

.. Che gelida manina (La Bohème) Puccini. Mr. JOHN McCORMACK.

Two movements from the dramatic Choral Symphony, 'Homage to E. A. Poe' (Op. 48) Joseph Holbrooke. (a) Hymn (male voices and orchestra)

(b) The Haunted Palace (chorus and orchestra) (First performance.)

.. Vesti la giubba (Pagliacci) .. Leoncavallo. Mr. JOHN McCormack.

Night hymn at sea .. Goring Thomas. Madame CLARA BUTT and Mr. KENNERLEY RUMFORD.

Detailed comment upon this interesting and varied programme is unnecessary, even did space permit. Mention must, however, be made of the excellent singing of the choir in Samuel Wesley's fine motet, 'In exitu Israel,' It was a thrilling interpretation, and probably one of the which, according to the programme-book, 'starts with a bold subject'! (it is really a Gregorian intonation); but nothing was said about Wesley's having been born at Bristol, or that he was one of the earliest and certainly the most enthusiastic propagandist of Bach's music in this country. Miss Mildred Pritchard, a local artist, gave a neat rendering of Grieg's Pianoforte concerto. As Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's Dramatic Choral Symphony is shortly to be produced in its entirety by the Leeds Choral Union, by which it was commissioned, notice of the work may be deferred until that event takes place.

The festival was brought to an interesting conclusion on Saturday morning by an excellent concert performance—the first in that form-of Wagner's 'Die Walkure.' It may suffice merely to record the event, adding that this presentation of the music shorn of its stage accessories had its advantages and disadvantages.

In conclusion, Mr. George Riseley conducted throughout with boundless energy and relentless alertness. Nothing escaped his notice, and the result was a series of successful interpretations of works representing various schools and periods, from Bach to Holbrooke. It is now thirty-five years since Mr. Walter J. Kidner became associated with the Bristol festival in a business capacity—that was at the first meeting in 1873. Appointed secretary in 1878, he has rendered splendid service in that capacity, combined with that of business manager. His many friends were glad to find that his health had so much improved as to enable him to be at his post and discharge his exacting and important duties with his accustomed unfailing courtesy.

THE SHEFFIELD MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

October 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Sheffield musical festival was a memorable event in the annals of these gatherings. It brought forward nothing new, but it afforded its patrons an extensive outlook on cosmopolitan art both old and modern. The notable feature was the punctilious care with which a programme presenting considerable executive difficulties was performed. resources available were of the very best, and assiduous rehearsals had welded them into a splendid unity. That the English school of composers was almost entirely ignored is a matter for regret. Some solace may be derived from the fact that Dr. H. Walford Davies's 'Everyman' was included in the scheme, presumably because of its inherent merit and not because of its nationality. Mr. Henry J. Wood was the conductor, and he brought with him the Queen's Hall band It will be remembered that Mr. Wood also conducted the 1902 festival, and that Herr Weingartner conducted in

The reputation of the Sheffield festival was originally made by the exceptionally fine performances of the chorus trained by Dr. Coward, whose genius in this department is now familiar to the world. At the present festival the choir on the whole again displayed those qualities that have made it famous. Here and there it was possible to detect flaws, that arose not from any lack of ability or resource but apparently from lack of sincere enthusiasm for the music. The balance of the choir was as follows: sopranos, 94: contraltos, 79; tenors, 83; basses, 80; total, 336. For two works a choir of 50 boys' voices was added. The band consisted apparently (no list was issued) of between 70 and 80 performers. An old question is raised by this relation of choral to instrumental forces. At Sheffield as often elsewhere the balance of the two forces was fortuitous. The orchestral platform holds this or that number of performers, and all join in every work. The arrangement is not as a rule unsatisfactory in heavy oratorios, but a much finer adjustment of tone-colour is demanded by many other modern works. Although Berlioz was too precise in his directions as to the performance of his choral works, it must be confessed that he was very early on the right track. Sheffield folk are enterprising and ambitious; they may gain fresh laurels by devoting attention to this finest ever given of Mendelssohn's masterpiece. The chorus, familiar with every note, was able to devote itself whole-heartedly to the realization of mood, and the principals were also impressive. They were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Eva Rich, Miss Jenny Taggart, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Dalton Baker.

On the second day the first work performed was 'The Beatitudes, by César Franck. It did not greatly interest the audience. There are many fine moments in the oratorio, but by César Franck. It did not greatly interest the much of it is uninspired: sometimes it is melodramatic, and it is often spun out to accommodate the tedious and weak libretto. The sixth Beatitude contains some really beautiful music. The oratorio was followed by a performance of Tchaikovsky's B flat Pianoforte concerto by Madame Teresa Carreño, who played superbly, and excited the audience to intense enthusiasm. Berlioz's 'Te Deum' for three choirs, organ and orchestra was the last work performed on this day. With such a splendidly-equipped chorus it need scarcely be said that this striking work made a great effect, and with the opportunities it affords for choral display, particularly for massive sonority, it might have been specially composed for the Sheffield Choir. The 'third' choir is composed for the Sheffield Choir. for children's voices. Berlioz asked for 600 children to sing with 200 adults, and an orchestra of 134 players. At Sheffield 50 children sang, and the only defect in a glorious performance was that the children's choir was not sufficiently heard, although they showed good training.

On the third day 'Everyman' was performed with great success. I have heard many other performances of this remarkable work, but I can recall none at which the expressive beauties of the music were brought out as they were at Sheffield. The principals were Madame de Vere Sapio, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Frederic Austin. At this concert fine performances of Bach's Violin concerto in G major, No. 2, and the same composer's Chaconne were given by Mr. Fritz Kreisler, and an extraordinarily clean and finished performance of Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel's merry pranks' was given by the orchestra. 'Sea drift,' for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, by Frederic Delius, was given for the first time in England. Many of the audience shook their heads at this work, and failed to catch its note, perhaps because it was performed somewhat perfunctorily. The idiom of the work is strange and subtle. Many of the designed effects did not come off, mainly because the instrumental and choral tone demanded a far finer adjustment than was attempted. The story related in Walt Whitman's strangely beautiful poem is mournful. A bird has lost his mate and calls piningly for her return. A boy interprets into words the anguish of the call:

O past! O happy life! O songs of joy! In the air, in the woods, over fields Loved! loved! loved! loved! loved! But my mate no more, no more with me—We two together no more.

Mr. Delius's music may be difficult to follow, if only because of its comparative formlessness. As I have said above, many felt untouched, but others discerned a consistency of treatment in the music and an atmosphere born of the poem. It may be hoped that the work may soon be heard again under ideal conditions of choral and orchestral balance. Mr. Frederic Austin sang the bass solo with great conviction.

On the fourth day the programme included:

Cantata (for solo voices) 'L'Enfant Prodigue' ... Claude Debussy.
Symphony in D, No. 15 ('Haffiner') Mozart.
Manzoni Requiem Verdi.
Suite from the opera 'The eve of Christmas,' for soli, chorus and orchestra Rimsky-Korsakoff.
Selection from 'Die Meistersinger,' Act III. ... Wagner.

Debussy's work is an early one. It obtained a prize so long ago as 1884, and thus it represents the composer's early style. The libretto relates very touchingly the old story of the prodigal son. The music makes no strain upon the attention. It is simple, and often beautiful, but it displays no genius. Sometimes the bud of the composer's mature style can be discerned, but how far the re-scoring of the work for the festival may be responsible for this I am unable to say. The cantata was admirably sung in French by Madame Nicholls, Mr. Felix Senius and Mr. Frederic Austin.

The Manzoni Requiem received full justice from such adequate resources. Its theatrical and daring realism, vivid contrasts, and melodic attractiveness impelled attention even though one felt its lack of real and deep insight. The Rimsky-Korsakoff selection did not show the composer at his best. The music was often thin and sometimes distinctly commonplace. Snatches of melody and lively rhythm did not fully atone for this. It was a bold venture to give the 'Meistersinger' selection on the concert platform. The justification of the experiment was its approach to success, and, it may be hoped, its suggestion to non-opera goers that they should hear the masterpiece complete on the stage. The performance was a fine one. There were fourteen soloists, all well-known singers, and the chorus was excellent.

The last day was devoted to Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, Beethoven's Choral Symphony, and a miscellaneous selection. The supremacy of Bach was never more convincingly exhibited than on this occasion. The performance was regarded by all as the culminating feature of the festival. Immense pains had been taken to rehearse the work. Mr. Wood wrote an organ part, and the orchestra was specially constituted to give effect to the composer's colouring and methods. There were eight flutes, eight oboes, eight bassoons (for which Bach did not write), two oboi d'amore, two oboi da caccia, and a solo viola da gamba. The chief vocal soloists were Mr. Dalton Baker, Mr. Webster Millar, Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Jessie Goldsack, Mr. H. Witherspoon, Mr. Robert Charlesworth, and Mr. Joseph Lycett. Although all were competent, a special word of praise is due to Mr. Millar for the able way in which he sang the arduous part of the Evangelist. The tone-colour secured in the accompaniments was peculiarly beautiful and haunting. The chorus-singing was sublime—there is no other word to describe it. One might feel that with all its tremendous, thrilling force the famous chorus 'Have lightnings and thunders' was too staccato, and that the lovely last chorus was somewhat too daintily treated, but the overwhelming grandeur and expression of the interpretation generally will live long in the memory when all else has been forgotten. The performance was a triumph for Mr. Wood and Dr. Coward, and a noble tribute to the genius of Bach.

At the evening concert, which concluded the festival, the choir sang the following works under the direction of Dr. Coward:

or. Coward

Lamentation (for male voices) (unaccompanied) ... Palestrina. Laudi alla Vergine Maria' ('Paradiso') (unaccompanied) ... Alla Cappella chorus for female voices. O Death, thou art the tranquil night' (unaccom-.. .. Peter Cornelius, panied) Full Chorus. 'Love' (Chorus for male voices) Richard Strauss. Four Songs (for female voices, with accompani-ment of horns and harp) Brahms. J. S. Bach. Full Chorus and organ.

The Palestrina piece was finely sung and the other unaccompanied pieces were effective, if not specially so. The Cornelius piece called for more mood. The trios would have been better as music with half the number of voices, but all the same the tone was beautiful. The motet went splendidly. It was evident that the Sheffield choralists have taken to Bach.

Beethoven's Choral Symphony was the last work performed. The instrumental movements displayed the orchestra at its best, and the choir unexhausted by its previous great efforts again blazed forth triumphantly. The soloists were: Miss Jenny Taggart, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Frederic Austin.

The attendance was good, but the seats were rarely all filled. About five-sevenths of the audience at any time consisted of ladies, a fact that may not imply lack of interest on the part of the men, but simply that they could not spare the time to attend. The services of Mr. J. W. Phillips at the organ throughout the festival deserve special mention. It remains only to add that Mr. J. A. Rodgers contributed many able and interesting analytical notes to the programmes, and that the officials, from the secretaries, Mr. E. Willoughby Firth and Mr. Noel W. Burbidge, downwards, were particularly courteous and attentive.

'ELIJAH' AT THE ALEXANDRA PALACE.

Dr. Hans Richter once remarked, after conducting the G minor Symphony, that 'Mozart has a future before him.' The same may be said of Mendelssohn, judging from the manner in which his magnum opus was rendered by the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society on Saturday evening, October 10, and the huge audience it attracted to the northern height on that occasion. Chorally triumphant, the performance reached a very high level of excellence. Mr. Allen Gill is not only a born conductor and a musician fully qualified technically for the work whereunto he has set his hand, but he is a poeticallyminded artist who has a much deeper insight into music than its mere crotchets and quavers afford. Moreover, he has the precious gift of being able to inoculate, as it were, his singers with his own enthusiasm, technical skill, and, above all, poetic feeling. What is the result, and, above all, poetic feeling. What is the result, and voice, not as four-in-a-bar chorus hacks, but as musically intelligent people, whether crying unto Baal or pouring forth their pean of gratitude in 'Thanks be to God.' This is high praise, but it is fully deserved. May it encourage Mr. Gill and his colleagues to further effort in uplifting the cause of choral music in England.

The soloists were Miss Emily Breare, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Harold Wilde and Sir Charles Santley, and Mr. George Wilby led the band. Mr. G. D. Cunningham, who presided at the organ, played before the commencement of the oratorio two pieces by Mendelssohn—the Prelude and Fugue in C minor (one of the three dedicated to Thomas Attwood with reverence and gratitude'), and the last movement of the first Sonata.

BRASS BAND FESTIVAL.

The fact that nearly 60,000 people visited the Crystal Palace on September 26, attracted thereto by the annual National Brass Band Festival, is a sufficient proof of the popularity of that music-making. No fewer than 165 bands competed, of which Yorkshire and Lancashire furnished much the greater proportion. The great event of the day was the keen struggle for the 1,000 guineas championship trophy, which carries with it a cash prize of £40 and a bronze medal for each bandsman. For this, seventeen bands competed, and as four of them had previously won the coveted prize, interest in the competition was heightened to the point of enthusiasm. The test-piece was a selection of airs from Wagner's 'Rienzi,' excellently arranged by Mr. S. Cope, and the judges were Lieutenant Charles Godfrey, Mr. J. Ord Hume, and Mr. Walter Reynolds. Irwell Springs Band proved to be the victors, thus repeating their success of the year 1905. Mr. W. Rimmer, the proud and skilful conductor of this organization, also conducted the Wingates Temperance, Shaw, and Black Dike Mills bands. The second prize—a challenge cup, value fifty guineas, presented by the proprietors of The Daily Telegraph—was won by the Perfection Soap Works Band—a name suggestive of clean renderings—ably conducted by Mr. W. Halliwell. Among the other events of the day was a Concertina Band Contest. In this and in all the other competitions the standard of interpretation was very high.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Although no novelty of great importance has been produced at the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts during the latter part of the season that concluded on October 24, several works merit comment. On October I was performed for the first time the Concert Overture in G minor by Mr. York Bowen. Written some five years ago, the work shows a certain immaturity in several passages, but it is an exceedingly bright and vigorous composition that appeals by reason of its exuberance and straightforward expression, qualities which evoked hearty applause from an appreciative audience. The necessity of Mr. Henry J. Wood attending at the rehearsals and festival at Sheffield, obliged him to engage a deputy for Queen's Hall, the choice falling upon Mr. Edouard Colonne, who conducted the New Symphony Orchestra during the absence of the Queen's Hall Orchestra at Sheffield. The general excellence of the performances was maintained, and a more than usual number of works by French composers introduced in the programmes, Mr. Colonne's reading of these adding to the interest of the evenings.

The Queen's Hall Orchestra returned on October 10, and Mr. Wood resumed the direction on October 12. The following night the first performance was given of a prelude to the 'Agamemnon' of Æschylus, by Mr. W. H. Bell. This opens with an introduction, Adagio, of mournful character, which would seem to express the prophecies of misfortune uttered by Cassandra. The great Greek king appears to enter with the Allegro mollo portion, which begins with a vigorous subject and is worked up to an energetic climax. The misfortunes of the hero, and finally his murder, seem to have inspired the latter part of the overture, which concludes in a manner suggestive of a funeral procession. Two orchestral pieces of lighter, and, be it added, of more pleasing character, were produced on October 15. These were severally entitled 'Age' and 'Youth,' by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral. The composer has been content to represent the former title by a graceful piece in the form of a minuet, and to suggest youth by a Gigue, a Vivace in 6-8 measure. Both works were accorded a favourable reception, and merit the attention of amateur orchestral societies.

It is worthy of remark that the largest audiences have assembled when works of the most important and serious design have been included in the programmes, and that the soloists have justified their engagements.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

The Saturday afternoon Symphony Concerts at Queen's Hall were resumed on October 17, when the first performance was given in London of Sir Edward Elgar's second 'Wand of Youth' suite, conducted by the composer. The highly favourable impression which this group of dainty pieces made at their production at the recent Worcester festival, was fully confirmed on the occasion of their initial hearing in the metropolis. Of the six numbers forming the suite, those most favourably received at Queen's Hall were the opening March, the Scherzino and the Finale, the vigour of the last-named proving very acceptable after the sustained delicacy of the preceding three numbers. Another feature of the concert was the reappearance of Mr. Eugène Ysaye, who revived Corelli's Concerto Grosso No. 8, for two solo violins, string orchestra, and organ. In this extremely interesting example of 17th century music the Belgian violinist was most ably assisted by Mr. Maurice Sons, who played the second violin solo part, and by Mr. Frederick B. Kiddle at the organ. Mr. Ysaye was also heard at his very best in Beethoven's concerto, which, elicited such enthusiastic applause that he was recalled to the platform no fewer than six times. The programme included the overture to Mozart's 'Magic flute,' conducted by Mr. Wood, and Sir Edward Elgar's overture 'In the South,' given under the composer's direction.

THE REVIVAL OF 'IOLANTHE.'

It is a long-admitted fact that fairies never grow old, and this in part may account for the freshness that clings as a charmed mantle round Gilbert and Sullivan's 'Iolanthe,' originally produced at the Savoy Theatre in 1882, and revived there with emphatic success on October 19. Perhaps the most significant sign of the hold Sullivan's music has acquired on the people was that the famous madrigal was sung impromptu, in parts, by the gallery folk before the curtain was raised! After this, it is scarcely necessary to say that the witty and fantastic opera had a most appreciative audience. The characters of the Lord Chancellor, Mountararat, and Strephon were embodied in the true Savoy spirit by Messrs. Workman, Rutland Barrington and Henry Lytton, and the parts of Iolanthe, Phyllis and the Queen were pleasingly impersonated by Mesdames Jessie Ross, Clara Dow and Louie Bond. Mr. Leo Sheffield made the old effects with the sentry's song, and Mr. Henry Herbert appeared as Tolloller. The choruses were brightly rendered, and Mr. F. Cellier, as 'many a time and oft,' secured an excellent ensemble.

RECITALS.

St. James's Hall was re-opened, under new management, on October 3 by a violin recital given by Miss Marie Hall, who was heard to the greatest advantage in Goldmark's concerto in A minor (Op. 28). The young artist was supported by Miss Lonie Basche at the pianoforte, and by Miss Helen Hulme, who contributed some songs.

Mr. Frederick Moore gave a Chopin recital at St. James's Hall on October 17 before a crowded and highly-appreciative audience. His admirably chosen programme contained some of the best known examples of the Polish master, in addition to several less frequently heard pieces. Among his best achievements were the Ballade in F and the Scherzo in C sharp minor, both of which were excellently played. Among the Studies that were performed, that in A flat (Op. 10, No. 10) deserves special notice for the brilliancy of technique displayed by the pianist.

BECHSTEIN HALL.

Mr. Harold Bauer gave pianoforte recitals on September 26 and October 1, on both occasions interpreting masterpieces for his instrument with fine appreciation of the composers'

Madame Carreño's two pianoforte recitals, respectively on October 3 and 17, attracted large audiences, and as heretofore her playing aroused the enthusiasm of her listeners.

The clever young violinist, Mr. Rowsby Woof, joined Mr. York Bowen in a violin and pianoforte recital on October 10, when they afforded manifest pleasure to an attentive audience.

On October 13 and 20, Mr. Albert Spalding, assisted by Mr. Alfredo Oswald at the pianoforte, gave violin recitals, which testified to his making satisfactory progress in his art.

Record may be made of the first appearance in London, on October 20, of Miss Marthe Marcelli, a girl violinist of thirteen years, who has talent and has been well taught, but should not be heard again in public for some time to come.

The most memorable recital at Æolian Hall took place on October 10, when Miss Ellen Beck, Court singer to the King of Denmark, sang with great charm and finish in five BACH'S B MINOR MASS AT READING.

The Oxford Bach Choir and Oxford Choral and Philharmonic Society gave a performance of this work at University College, Reading, on October 21, conducted by Dr. H. P. Allen. The choir did not display much sonority, but their attack was sure, and their acquaintance with the music enabled them to give an adequate interpretation. Dignity and solemnity were aimed at rather than dramatic force. The solo portions were sung by Miss Ruth Freeman, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. J. Campbell McInnes. The orchestral accompaniments to the solo parts were unusually thin, and unfortunately there was no organ to support the chorus. The concert attracted a good and interested audience.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music: Ada Lewis Scholarship, Arthur Brian Nash (Darjeeling, India), pianoforte; Ethel Huskisson Martin (London), violoncello; John Spink (Brentford), violin. The Orchestral Instruments Scholarship to Edward James Augarde (London), clarinet. The Baume (Manx) Scholarship, for any branch of music, to Mary Purcell (Ramsay, Isle of Man), vocalist. The Henry Smart Scholarship (organ), to Cuthbert Lionel Heel (Folkestone). The Maud Mary Gooch Scholarship, (organ), to Alec Rowley (London). The Stainer Exhibition (organ), to Patrick Kevin Buckley (Beccles). The John Thomas (Welsh) Scholarship (instrumentalists), to Edgar Jones (Landore). The following scholarships will shortly be competed for: Macfarren (musical composition); Sainton (violin-playing); George Mence Smith (vocal 'in conjunction with musical aptitude'). The first two scholarships are open to male and female candidates, the last named to male candidates only. Full particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, W.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

Vienna, October 15, 1908.

At the Court Opera several familiar works have been revived, newly studied and effectively mounted. Direktor Felix Weingartner devoted himself with loving care to Wagner's 'Siegfried' and Johann Strauss's ballet 'Aschenbrödel' (Cinderella), and created fresh and powerful impressions. A revival of Bizet's 'Djamileh,' on the other hand, was received with anything but unanimous favour. The new opera at the Raimund Theatre achieved a great success, and made many new friends with last night's performance of Mozart's 'Zauberflöte.' Direktor Simons, of the Volksoper, recently gave an altogether excellent performance of 'The Flying Dutchman,' though on the small stage the two ships came badly into collision, and the consequent difficulties suddenly thrown in the stage manager's way proved no easy problem to solve.

The concert season is slowly awakening from its long summer sleep. As its first interesting event, the appearance of the very youthful violin virtuoso Sascha Colbertson may be mentioned; he has announced three concerts with orchestra, and gave the first one on October 12. There can be no doubt that in his case we have to recognise a superior talent which has also progressed far in its development and especially surmounts all the greatest difficulties of technique with victorious ease. At the same time, the performances of the wonder-boy have amply demonstrated that his appearance was premature; at least he is as yet unable to sound the emotional depths of Beethoven's concerto. Colbertson, who is fourteen years old, was born in Roumania and trained by Prof. Sevčík at Prague.

RICHARD VON PERGER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The season of the Philharmonic Society opened with a miscellaneous concert on October 9, at which the principal attractions were Madame de Vere Sapio, Miss Norah Drewett (pianoforte), with Mr. John McCormack and Mr. Alexander Tucker. There was much interest in the first appearance in Belfast of Mr. John McCormack, who has so rapidly taken a leading position as a tenor vocalist, and was given a particularly warm reception, his lovely voice was given a particularly warm reception, his lovely voice and refined singing amply justifying the great expectations of the audience. The Society's part in the concert consisted of Thos. Weelkes's (1660) madrigal 'Mars in a fury,' 'Into the silent land' (Arthur Foote) for ladies' voices, Mendelssohn's '43rd Psalm' (Judge me, O God), and a very interesting new composition by a young member of the Society's orchestra, Mr. Norman Hay. This work, a six-rarr madrical was the prize composition at the Dublin part madrigal, was the prize composition at the Dublin 'Feis Ceoil,' 1908, and considering the youth of the composer is really a work of remarkable promise.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association gave a popular performance of Dvorák's dramatic cantata 'The Spectre's Bride' at the Town Hall on October 3, which, considering the difficulties of the work, proved a crucial test. Much credit is due to chorus and orchestra, who gave a commendable rendering, characterized by technical efficiency and due regard to accent, phrasing and dramatic expression. The principals were Miss Alice Hare, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Dan Price, who sang with intelligence, but occasionally they were overweighted by the heavily scored orchestral accompaniments. Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducted with tact and judgment.

On October 5, Messrs. Harrison held their first concert of the current series in the Town Hall, the great attraction being the first appearance in the Midlands of Madame Tetrazzini, who completely conquered her audience by the charm of her wonderful voice. With her were associated

Miss Phyllis Archibald (contralto), Mr. James Davis (tenor) and Mr. Robin Overleigh (baritone), all newcomers, the instrumental portion of the programme being restricted to some violin and pianoforte solos, given by Miss Margel Gluck and Miss Adelaide Dodgson. Mr. Hamilton Harty performed.

In celebration of their hundredth concert, the Midland Musical Society gave a performance of Sullivan's Golden Legend' in the Town Hall on October 10, one that was by far the most impressive and finished rendering yet secured by this Society. The chorus was well balanced, tone and intonation were excellent, and most artistic results were attained. The orchestra, comprising both professional and amateur players, discharged their duties in a gratifying manner, and solos were efficiently sung by Miss Betty Booker, Miss May Seiber, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. George Uttley. Mr. A. J. Cotton, the conductor, had evidently spared no pains in the preparation of the cantata.

Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Gervase Elwes gave a pianoforte and vocal recital in the New Temperance Hall on October 16. The programme was of an exceptionally attractive character, comprising as it did a number of pianoforte pieces by William Byrde, Orlando Gibbons, Purcell and Dr. Arne, the Romantic school being represented by Schumann's 'Kinderscenen and the Etudes Symphoniques.' Mr. Gervase Elwes's contribution to the programme included six songs by Brahms, and eight songs by other composers, two of which were two charming 18th century Bergerettes, the others being culled from the compositions of Debussy, Anthony Young, G. J. Wilkinson, Joseph Holbrooke and Roger Quilter. Mr. Frank S. Davey, accompanied.

Additional interest was attached to the fine all-round performance of Mendelssohn's oratorio 'Elijah,' by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society under Dr. Sinclair's able conductorship, which took place in the Town Hall on October 22, inasmuch as the event was a fitting occasion to commemorate the approaching centenary of Mendelssohn's birth. The principals were Madame Mary Conly, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. William Higley, Mr. C. W. Perkins officiating at the organ as usual. For the first time in the history of this Society, the committee issued an interesting booklet for the season, containing excellent portraits of the president, Mr. Richard Peyton, Dr. Sinclair, Mr. Allen K. Blackall and of all the principal artists appearing at these concerts during the season, in addition to a descriptive résumé of the principal works to be

The Shirehampton and Avonmouth Choral Society gave a The Shirehampton and Avonmouth Choral Society gave a concert on September 30 in the Parish Hall, Shirehampton, under the direction of Mr. P. Napier Miles. There was a careful rendering of Samuel Wesley's 'Sing aloud with gladness,' and of Dr. C. H. Lloyd's eight-part chorus 'To morning.' Instrumental compositions were performed by the Royal College of Music Quintet (Messrs. T. F. Morris, Herbert H. Kinze, F. Bridge, W. Wiltshire and Ivor James). Mozart's Quintet in C and Beethoven's Quintet in C (10, 20) Were artistically rendered and Messrs Morris. in C (Op. 29) were artistically rendered, and Messrs. Morris, Kinze, Bridge and James effectively played the Cavatina from Beethoven's Quartet in B flat (Op. 130).

On October 8 the Dolphin Male-Voice Choir—formed about eight months ago—inaugurated its season's work with a musical conversazione, held at Stuckey's Restaurant, when the members—nearly sixty in number—sang some pieces under the direction of Mr. F. H. Simpson.

What may be termed the opening of the musical season was the first of the Harrison concerts, given on October 10, at which Madame Tetrazzini made her first appearance in Edinburgh and was accorded an enthusiastic reception.

Messrs. Paterson & Sons announce their twenty-second season's orchestral concerts, but the exclusion of choral works from the present scheme will cause great disappointment to many music-lovers here in Edinburgh. The Scottish Orchestra has again been engaged, with Messrs. Georg Henschel, Emil Mlynarski, Peter Raabe, Fritz Steinbach and Henri Verbrugghen—the leader of the orchestra—as conductors on the occasions of Dr. Cowen's absence.

At the Classical Concerts given by Messrs. Methven & Simpson, the St. Petersburg Quartet, the Parisian Quartet and a special octet party, led by Mr. Maurice Sons, will make their first appearances in Edinburgh.

The Choral Union is rehearsing Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' and in conjunction with the Amateur Orchestral Society will give a performance of Mackenzie's 'The Cotter's Saturday night.' Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' has been chosen by Mr. Kirkhope for practice by his choir this season, and the works to be studied by Mr. Moonie's choir are 'Bon-Bon' suite (Coleridge-Taylor), 'Ode to the north-east wind' (Cliffe), and scenes from 'The Desert,' for male voices (Felicien David).

Clapperton; Kilmarnock Choral Union, 'The Creation'; Saltcoats Choral Union, Schubert's 'Song of Miriam'; Barrhead Choral Union, Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.'

The feature of this month's music has been the unusually large number of concerts, both vocal and instrumental, given by local musicians, doubtless with a view to securing greater public support before the regular concert season begins. Under the auspices of the Bach Choir a most interesting chamber concert took place on October 2. The programme included some of Bach's songs artistically sung by Mrs. Mather; a delightful rendering of the 'Coffee' cantata, soloists Miss Gertrude Simpson and Messrs. G. H. Martin and H. Menneille, the short Furge and Glorie from the and H. Macneilly; the choral Fugue and Gloria from the 'Magnificat,' sung by the Bach Choir under Mr. J. M. Diack; a Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello, played by Messrs. W. Senior and J. Linden; and the Concerto in D minor for three pianofortes, effectively rendered by Misses Macconnochie, Nairn, and Walker. Another event which calls for notice was the appearance of our gifted young townsman, Mr. James Friskin, in two pianoforte recitals on October 1 and 8. In programmes selected with excellent judgment, Mr. Friskin proved himself to be a pianist of outstanding ability, his technical powers being of the highest order and his readings, especially of Beethoven, giving evidence of ripe musicianship.

Under the direction of Mr. A. M. Henderson, a local pianist of distinction, two very enjoyable chamber concerts were given on October 20 and 27. The programmes were given on October 20 and 27. The programmes included trios for pianoforte, violin and violoncello by Mozart and Arensky, in which the concert-giver was associated with Miss Bessie Spence (violin) and Mr. John Linden (violoncello), and quartets by Rheinberger and Dvorák, played by Miss Bessie Spence (violin), Mr. John Daly (viola), Mr. George Bruce (violoncello) and Mr. A. M. Henderson (pianoforta). Daly (viola), Mr. George Bruce (violoncello) and Mr. A. M. Henderson (pianoforte). Some solo pieces were also contributed by the various performers. Among other music-makings have been chamber concerts by a new combination, 'The Glasgow Trio'--Miss Maggie Horne (violin), Mr. John Linden (violoncello), and Mr. Wilfrid Senior (pianoforte); and by Messrs. Philip Halstead and Henri Verbrugghen. Also a pianoforte recital by Madame Carreño; a violin recital by Mr. Holroyd Paull; and a week's performances of opera by the Moody-Manners Company.

The opening concert of the seventieth season of the Philharmonic Society took place on October 13, when a fine persormance was given of Beethoven's sourth Symphony. Madame Carreño played in a brilliant and virile interpretation of Grieg's Pianosorte concerto, and Signor Sammarco made a great impression by his powerful singing of the 'Prologue' to 'Pagliacci.' An interesting departure from the usual conservative custom with regard to new works by native composers was the playing of Mr. Hamilton Harty's clever Comedy Overture. At the general rehearsal previous to the first concert the members of the Philharmonic Society's chorus presented their conductor, Dr. F. II. Cowen, with a handsome silver rose-bowl as an expression of their regard and to mark the occasion of his recent marriage.

The Rawdon Briggs String Quartet gave a delightful concert in the Yamen Rooms on October 8, when this new combination—which includes Mr. Rawdon Briggs (leader), ombination—which includes Mr. Rawdon Briggs (reader),
Mr. J. S. Bridge (second violin), Mrs. Rawdon Briggs (viola) and Mr. W. Hatton (violoncello)—gave artistic performances of Mozart's Quartet No. 23 in F major and Brahms's Pianoforte quintet in F minor (Op. 34), Mr. Isidor Cohn ably playing the pianoforte part in the last-named work. The vocalist, Mr. Horatio Connell, sang with fine expression and dramatic power in songs by Hugo Wolf, Brahms and Max Mayer.

Lectures on musical subjects again find a place in the syllabus of the Corporation free lectures, which are given in the Central Picton Hall and in eighteen suburban districts of this great city. Among the subjects announced are 'The evolution of the string quartet,' by Mr. H. McCullagh; 'Mendelssohn: a centenary celebration,' and 'Beethoven and his music,' Rev. H. H. McCullagh; 'Irish fairy songs and tales,' Miss Madelaine O'Connor; 'Welsh music,' Miss Edith Roberts; 'The science of song,' Mr. F. H. Seddon; 'Music: ancient, mediæval and modern,' Mr. A. E. Workman; 'Music: good and bad,' Mr. Woods; and 'English music during the past seventy years,' Mr. Fortay. To assist those who desire to pursue further the subjects dealt with, the syllabus contains a list of books suitable for study which are to be found in the Central reference library. Excellent operatic performances have been given by the Moody-Manners company during their recent visit to this city. Large audiences were the rule, and a performance worthy of being placed on record was that of Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly,' in which Madame Fanny Moody, sang and acted very finely.

At her concert-Philharmonic Hall, October 16-Miss Myrta Stubbs, a young artist of this city, gave further proof of her qualifications as a pianist. Her solos—which included the D major Organ prelude and fugue (Bach-D'Albert), Liszt's 'Il Sospiro' and 'Isolden's Liebestod' showed her as possessing many of the qualities which prove the musician as well as the executant.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor conducted the Symphony Orchestra in performances of his music in the Sun Hall on October 19, including the overture to 'Hiawatha,' the Ballade in A minor,

(Op. 33), and the incidental music to 'Nero.'

A great and enthusiastic audience welcomed Dr. Hans Richter on October 15 to conduct the first of the twenty weekly concerts of the Hallé Society. The programme included the 'Meistersinger' overture, Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung,' and Beethoven's C minor Symphony. Madame Carreño played Grieg's Pianoforte concerto, Liszt's sixth Rhapsody, and, as an encore, the late Edward MacDowell's dainty little piece, 'Hexentanz.' At the second concert Dr. Brodsky played the Violin concerto in D of his fellow countryman and friend, Tchaikovsky. The orchestral selections included Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture; Debussy's Prelude, 'Après-midi d'un Faune'; and 'Concert by her beautiful voice and beautiful vocalization.

The first of the increasingly popular Promenade Concerts was given on October 17, Mr. Speelman again conducting the band of fifty performers drawn from the Hallé Orchestra. Designedly an evening of French music, the band played the 'Carnaval Romain,' and favourite selections from the 'Faust' music (Berlioz), a Sérénade in E flat and the 'Danse Macabre' (Saint-Saëns), the 'Mignon' overture (Ambroise Thomas), the 'L'Arlésienne' Suite No. 2—why not the composer's own No. 1? (Bizet), and two little favourite pieces by Gillet. The flautist, Mr. Edward De Jong, played Godard's Suite, Paggi's 'Remembrenza Neapolitane,' and a set of variations on the 'Carnaval de Venise' air, the last-named with exceptional brilliance. Miss Lucy Nuttall sang 'O love, from thy power,' from 'Samson et Dalila' (Saint-Saëns), and Sappho's air, 'O ma lyre immortelle,' from Gounod's opera.

At the first of the Gentlemen's Concerts—in the conductorship of which Mr. Franz Beidler succeeds Dr. Richter—there were interesting performances of the 'Figaro,' 'Water Carrier,' and 'Jessonda' overtures; of Goldmark's 'Rustic Wedding' symphony; and of Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite No. I. Mr. John McCormack was the solo vocalist. The Brodsky Quartet concerts were resumed for the season on October 21, the performers, as from the commencement, being Dr. Brodsky, Mr. Rawdon Briggs, Mr. Simon Speelman, and Mr. Carl Fuchs. Haydn's Quartet in C (Op. 76, No. 3); Schubert's first pianoforte Haydn's Trio in B flat; and Beethoven's Quartet in A minor (Op. 132) were in the programme. In the trio Mr. Max Mayer was at the pianoforte, greatly helping Dr. Brodsky and Mr. Carl Fuchs to secure for the work an inspiring interpretation.

Our famous Orpheus Glee Society, conducted by Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt, gave an extremely successful concert on October 21. In addition to rich gleanings from the Society's repertory, the programme contained Brahms's Alto rhapsody (Op. 53), with Madame Kirkby Lunn as the soloist. Mr. Arthur Catterall (violin) and Mr. Hamilton Harris (baritone) are claimed by Manchester, as is Madame Kirkby Lunn, therefore local enthusiasm very properly manifested itself at all the solo performances.

The first Subscription Concert of the Manchester Vocal Society's forty-second season was given on October 14, under Dr. Henry Watson's able direction. The programme included Mendelssohn's 2nd Psalm, and Carissimi's oratorio,

'Jonah.'
The Gentlemen's Glee Club, with a crowded membership, commenced its seventy-fifth season on October 6, Dr. Watson conducting. At his annual violoncello recital on October 12, Mr. James Richardson introduced Max Reger's Sonata in F minor for pianoforte and violoncello, Miss Edith Webster being at the former instrument. The violoncellist played an unpublished set of Variations in B minor by S. Coleridge-Taylor. Two songs of Mr. Richardson's, well sung by Madame Alice Lamb, also created a favourable impression. In a vocal and violin recital, given on October 13 by Miss Norah Meredith and Mr. Rudolf Bauerkeller, the former introduced two promising little lyrics by Miss Mabel Moss, and Mr. Bauerkeller a Toccata by the Swedish violinist and composer, Tor Aulin.

At a performance in English at the Gaiety Theatre of the 'Hippolytus' of Euripides, incidental music was performed specially written by Mr. Granville Bantock for the Greek chorus, with an appropriate regard to ancient scales and concords.

The concert season opened with a stirring pianoforte recital on October 7 by Madame Carreño, the first of the Chamber Music Society's concerts. On two successive Friday evenings, October 9 and 16, we have had visits from two operatic queens, Madame Melba (who was accompanied by Wilhelm Backhaus and Szigeti the violinist) and Madame Tetrazzini, who captivated the audience of the first Harrison

On October 19 the choir of Elswick Road Wesleyan Church gave an excellent performance of Brahms's German Requiem. This is no small feat for a church choir, and every credit is due to the conductor, Mr. George Dodds, for the results obtained. The instrumental portions were interpreted on the organ by the conductor's brother, Mr. H. Yeaman Dodds.

The South Shields Orchestral Society is rehearsing three symphonies: Beethoven's 'Pastoral,' Schubert's 'Tragic,' and Gade's A minor; and the Orchestral Society at Hexham is busy with Beethoven's fourth Symphony. Darlington Orchestral and Choral Society, under the baton of Mr. Thomas Henderson, promises Berlioz's 'Faust' at its first concert, and at its second—in recognition of the double centenary of next year—Haydn's 'Pauken' Symphony and Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture. Other items will be Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Rutland Boughton's 'Folk-song Variations.'

The Durham Musical Society is rehearsing Somervell's 'Forsaken Merman' and Stanford's 'The Revenge.' Out of twenty of the meetings of the Tyneside Sunday Lecture Society four are devoted to musical subjects. Two of the lecturers are Mr. W. H. Hadow and Mr. Cecil J. Sharp, who will also lecture on Monday evenings in January to the Literary and Philosophical Society.

Miss Evelyn Assmann, a juvenile violinist, gave on October 19 a recital at which she brilliantly played Bach's Chaconne, De Beriot's second Concerto, and other pieces. Mr. Francis Harford contributed some songs with his usual artistic success.

Last season the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union performed Bach's Mass in B minor. They commenced this season with material of a lighter calibre, when, on October 22, they performed Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind,' and Rutland Boughton's 'Folk-song variations,' all with much gusto, and revelling in many little touches of choral virtuosity. The accompaniments were played by the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, their first appearance in Newcastle. Dr. Coward conducted, and the soloists were Miss Esta d'Argo and Messrs. Maurice Pearce, Alfred Heather and Watkin Mills.

Compositions by Byrde, Bull, Gibbons, Dowland, Purcell ('Golden sonata'), D. Scarlatti and Daquin were included in the programme.

A visit from Richter and the Hallé Orchestra on October 14 was the first attraction at the Nottingham Subscription Concerts, when two or three novelties to this city were produced. Saint-Saëns's Violin concerto in B minor is seldom heard here, but Antonietti, who played the solo part, took the audience by storm. Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini' overture also was accorded a very hearty reception. Various familiar items were well received, and the concert was a great success.

Mr. Archie Rosenthal, who is closely connected with Nottingham, gave his annual concert on October 12, when he was very ably assisted by Mr. Achille Rivarde, the violinist. Mr. Rosenthal played an admirable selection from the works of Chopin, Carreño, MacDowell, Moritz Rosenthal and Stanford; and, in conjunction with the violinist, performed the familiar 'Kreutzer' sonata, and a sonata by Cæsar Franck.

The Triennial Festival, which is fully dealt with on p. 726, has to some extent delayed the opening of our musical season. It is worthy of note, however, that increased choral activity always follows upon this music-making, a fact which may be placed to the credit of the supreme local festivals unduly absorb the energies of a musical centre and result in a pernicious reaction.

Dr. Coward's party of 200 singers, who sailed for Canada on October 23, gave a public rehearsal in the New Wesleyan Victoria Hall on October 18. The choir consists of a section of Dr. Coward's own choral society, the Musical Union, supplemented by contingents from Southport, Newcastle, Huddersfield, Hull, York and other northern towns. Thirty members of this year's Sheffield Festival Chorus are also included in the choir. The programme comprises selections from 'The Dream of Gerontius' and 'The Messiah,' and a large répertoire of glees and part-songs will be drawn upon. The rehearsal was enjoyed by a crowded audience.

At the newly-opened Victoria Hall a number of interesting popular concerts have been given. Mr. H. Chisholm Jackson, the musical director, is busy organizing a choir and orchestra for the purpose of oratorio performances during the winter.

Musical services have been held at Upper Chapel, Norfolk Street, in connection with the opening of a new organ, built by Mr. A. Keates, of Sheffield. Mr. C. W. Perkins, of Birmingham, gave the first public recital on the new instrument.

ANTWERP.

Herr Heinrich Zöllner's music - drama 'Faust' was performed for the first time in Dutch at the local Flemish opera, the composer conducting.

BASLE.

The novelties to be performed by the Allgemeine Musikgesellschaft during the winter season of ten Symphony concerts, include Mr. Frederick Delius's 'Appalachia.

BAYREUTH.

If the recent Wagnerian performances were not financially successful, owing to the great cost of the representations, they fully maintained their high standard of interpretation from the ensemble point of view. The superb stagemanagement and the perfection of the chorus-singing calls for the highest praise. In this respect 'Lohengrin' was a revelation, the choral ensemble being so splendid as to revivify this early work of the Master's, whereby it became almost a new work. Wagner's ideal of 'the complete artwork' was all but realized in these magnificent representations of his wonderful creations.

The first genuine sensation of the new musical season came from an unexpected quarter, viz., the first concert of the Royal Orchestra, given in the Royal Opera House on October 2. The programme contained nothing more 'sensational' than three old symphonies—a little-known work in E flat by Haydn, an equally unhackneyed masterpiece in A by Mozart, (B. & H. No. 29), and Beethoven's 'Eroica.' But on the conductor's rostrum stood Germany's foremost living musician, Dr. Richard Strauss, to make his début as conductor of the Royal Orchestra, the successor of Felix Weingartner in the coveted office, and he gave performances of these classical pieces so unconventional in every way and yet so masterful and overpowering in their convincing spontaneity—the fusion of the conductor's master spirit with that of the dead composers—that the audience was com-pletely enthralled, and, after the 'Eroica,' gave Dr. Strauss enthusiastic ovations. Quite contrary to expectation, the musical effort, and quoted in answer to some who aver that future programmes contain a greater proportion of classical masterpieces than usual. The new conductor is evidently fired with an ambition to show Berliners how these 'old' works can be revivified by one of the most modern of master minds.—Among the symphonic works to be performed this season at the ten Philharmonic Concerts under Prof. Arthur Nikisch are a new Symphony by Akos von Buttykay, and Heinrich G. Noren's variations 'Kaleidoscope.' The lastnamed work has lately been much discussed in the German Press because, in one of the Variations, dedicated 'to a great contemporary,' fragments of two themes from Strauss's 'Heldenleben' were quoted, a proceeding which caused Dr. Strauss's publisher to involve Herr Noren in a protracted law case, though without success. Court decided that Strauss's themes were not 'melodies'!-At the Symphony Concerts conducted by Prof. Karl Panzner, in the Mozartsaal, the novelties will include Felix Woyrsch's C minor and Hans Huber's 'Heroic' Symphonies; the symphonic poems 'The Nun,' by Leo Blech, and 'Hero and Leander,' by Paul Ertel; an 'Overture to a Shakespearean Comedy,' by Paul Scheinpflug, and the Prelude ('Harvest Festival') to Act III. of Max Schillings's 'Moloch.'— Yet another symphony orchestra has been formed. Under the direction of Herr Oskar Fried the members thereof, Under on October 11, gave their first very successful concert at the Blüthner-Saal, after which the institution is called 'Bluthner-Orchestra.'--In the Beethoven-Saal, Herr Fritz Kreisler gave a concert on October 10, at which he produced a work of his own composition, viz., an Introduction (in modo di Recitativo) and Scherzo Burlesque' for violin alone.

BREMEN.

Among the novelties to be produced at the Philharmonic concerts, under Prof. K. Panzner, are Felix Woyrsch's Symphony in C minor; Hans Huber's 'Heroic' Symphony; Hugo Kaun's 'Three simple pieces for small orchestra'; Max Schillings's introduction to Act II. of his opera 'Moloch'; and Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations.

BRUSSELS.

A new humorous ballet entitled 'Quand les chats sont partis' (When the cats are away) was produced on October 16 at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie. The young composer, M. G. Lauweryns, was warmly congratulated on his bright and piquant score.—At the Conservatoire a new Mass for three equal voices, composed by M. Gevaert, was produced on October 14. The event created considerable interest, because since the esteemed and patriarchal director of the Conservatoire has devoted himself so assiduously to historical and didactic works, very few new compositions have come from his pen. This is his third Mass, his second one having been written at the age of fifteen, no less than sixty-five years ago!

BUENOS-AYRES.

At the local Colon-Théâtre, a new opera 'Aurora,' by Signor Panizza, an Argentine composer educated in Italy, was produced with great success.

CHRISTIANIA.

Edvard Grieg's posthumous compositions—consisting of songs, romances, pianoforte pieces and an unfinished String quartet—were recently produced here at a concert specially arranged for this purpose. The works, which date from 1865-1905, will shortly be published by Messrs. Peters, and are sure to be welcomed by the late master's many admirers.—Dr. Ludwig Wüllner, Germany's foremost interpreter of the classic and modern Lied, was so enthusiastically received at his first appearance in Norway that he had to give four 'song and recitation evenings' here, as well as at Bergen, instead of the single one originally announced for each town.

COLOGNE.

A gratifying success attended the performance, at the municipal opera house, of Donizetti's 'L'elisire d'amore' in Felix Mottl's 'new version,' which does away with spoken dialogue. The merry little work was performed in excellent style.——Shortly afterwards another almost forgotten work, the buffa-opera 'Le maître de Chapelle,' by Ferdinando Paër, was revived in a 'new version' by W. Kleefeld. This work, conducted by Fritz Steinbach, also met with much success.

FRANFURT-ON-MAIN.

The oldest and most distinguished local concert society, the Frankfurter Museumsgesellschaft, celebrated on October 2 the hundredth anniversary of its foundation by giving a festival concert, with Eugen d'Albert as soloist in Beethoven's 'Emperor' concerto.

HANOVER.

During the autumn holidays (October 3-17) the local branch of the Society of German lady music-teachers gave, in German, a course of lessons in the English Tonic Sol-fa system, called 'Tonika-Do-Methode.' This system has already been tried with success at a number of high schools for girls in Hanover, and it seems likely that it may meet with general acceptance in the Fatherland before many years have passed.

KARLSRUHE.

'Durch's Fenster' (Through the window), a new one-act opera by Herr Iwan Knorr, was produced here at the Court Theatre with considerable success. On the same evening Eugen d'Albert's charming opera 'Flauto solo' was performed for the first time in Karlsruhe.

KÖNIGSBERG.

A monument to Alfred Reisenauer, the pianist, erected by friends and admirers over his grave in the local cemetery, has just been unveiled.

LEIPZIG.

Prof. Max Reger's new and first Violin concerto in A (Op. 101) was produced here on October 15, for the first time, by Prof. Henri Marteau, to whom the work is dedicated. The Gewandhaus was the scene of an event to which violinists have looked forward with more than ordinary interest. The same young composer's new Pianoforte quintet will be brought to a first hearing by the Bohemian Quartet when they visit this town. Besides these works, Prof. Reger has just finished his Opus 108, a 'Symphonic prologue to a Tragedy,' which has already been accepted for performance at Cologne, Vienna, Hamburg, Prague and Leipzig.

LUCCA

Signor Luporini is the composer of a new three-act opera entitled 'Nora,' recently produced here with considerable success.

LYONS.

'Salome,' an opera composed by Monsieur Mariotte, will be produced at the local Grand-Théâtre during the present season. Herr Wilhelm Kienzl's 'Evangeliman' will also be introduced to the Lyonese under the title of 'Le Pêcheur de Saint-Othmar.'

MANNHEIM.

The Municipality has made arrangements for a series of free 'organ recitals for the people' which have immediately met with great success.

MEININGEN.

A monument to the famous clarinettist and friend of Brahms, Prof. Richard Mühlfeld, is to be erected over his grave in the local cemetery.

OSNABRÜCK.

A musical festival was held here on October 22 and 23. The programme included several works of Dr. Richard Strauss, conducted by the composer.

PARIS.

Dr. Hans Richter has signed a contract with the directors of the Grand Opéra, according to which he will conduct eight performances during June next year. 'Die Walkure,' Götterdämmerung' and 'Tristan' are the works selected.—According to the Gaulois a number of interesting old manuscripts have been found in the possession of a grand-daughter of Paganini. Amongst them are said to be some valuable and hitherto unpublished pieces by Mozart, Rossini and Farinelli.

PRAGUE.

Herr Gustav Mahler's new Symphony No. 7, in E minor, produced on September 19, met with great success, the distinguished composer receiving an ovation after the fourth movement as well as at the end. The work is in five movements, the second and fourth of which are both entitled 'Nachtmusik' (Night music.) Like the majority of Mahler's Symphonies, his No. 7 is of mammoth proportions, the performance, including short intervals, lasting no less than eighty-five minutes. — Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande' was performed here for the first time at the Deutsches Landestheater on September 28. The audience, cold at first, grew more appreciative as the work progressed.

ST. PETERSBURG.

M. Alexander Siloti's season of symphony concerts commenced on October 11 with a programme dedicated to the memory of the late Nicholas Rimsky-Korsakoff, and wholly devoted to works by the deceased master. Amongst the novelties to be performed during the season will be Edward Elgar's new Symphony in A flat, which M. Siloti is very anxious to be the first to perform on the Continent.

STOCKHOLM.

The local Concert Society has arranged for a series of orchestral concerts to be given in Germany, at which Swedish works are to be performed and Swedish soloists employed exclusively. The concerts are under the patronage of Queen Victoria of Sweden, and Mr. Tor Aulin is the conductor. The tour will commence in November at Karlsruhe.

VIBORG.

What is stated to be the first Finnish opera ever written was recently produced here at an open air theatre, before an enthusiastic audience of no fewer than 10,000 spectators gathered together from all parts of Finland. The work is called 'Pohjan neito.' Mr. Rytkonen is the author of the libretto, and Mr. Oscar Merikanto the composer of the music.

WIESBADEN.

A Richard Strauss festival was held here on October 4, 6, 7 and 10. The programmes comprised the majority of the master's Symphonic poems, a number of chamber works, as well as the 'Bardengesang' for men's voices and orchestra and the ballade 'Taillefer' for mixed chorus and orchestra.

ZÜRICH.

To celebrate the centenary of Mendelssohn's birth a three days' festival, devoted to the master's works, will be held here. Prof. Philipp Wolfrum, of Heidelberg, will deliver the oration in honour of the occasion.

The members of the Music Teachers' Association, of which Sir Alexander Mackenzie is the president, held their first meeting at the Broadwood Rooms on October 20, when the chairman, Mr. Stewart Macpherson, gave the inaugural address, taking as his subject, 'Concerning a better training of the young in the appreciation of music.' In the course of his interesting remarks, Mr. Macpherson advocated the importance of systematic training of the ear from early childhood, and warmly commended class-singing, in which sight-singing should have primary claims. The meeting was addressed by Miss L. H. M. Soulsby, who impressed upon teachers the desirability of giving pupils a lecture on the music to be performed at any concert they were about to attend. Two distinguished educational experts, Dr. W. H. Cummings and Dr. W. G. McNaught, took part in the discussion following upon the reading of the chairman's lecture.

The excellence of the system of musical rhythmic gymnastics invented by Monsieur Jaques-Dalcroze, for the purpose of imparting a sense of musical rhythm to the young by means of healthy physical exercise, was fully demonstrated by his clever pupil, Miss Kathleen O'Dowd, and a class of young ladies, at the rooms of Messrs. Breitkopf and Haertel, 54, Great Marlborough Street, on October 17. A number of graceful and interesting exercises, in various and also in combined rhythms, were gone through with much intelligence and precision, and it was evident that they were enjoyed as greatly by the performers as by the audience. Miss O'Dowd is making arrangements for giving a series of classes on the sub'ect.

To the lists already given under the heading 'The coming season' in our last issue must be added the following:

London Symphony Orchestra.—The fifth series of twelve concerts (October to May) will be successively conducted by Dr. Hans Richter, M. Emil Mlynarski, M. Wassili Safonoff and Herr Arthur Nikisch. On December 7, Sir Edward Elgar's new Symphony will be performed for the first time in London. The first performance of a new choral work, 'The Annunciation,' by Mr. Alick Maclean, will be given on February 15; and on March 1, Mr. W. H. Bell's new scena for baritone (soloist, Mr. Charles W. Clark), 'The ballad of the bird-bride' (Eskimo), will be produced, all under the direction of Dr. Richter. The twelve programmes are full of interest, and the interpretations are sure to be worthy of the works that have been chosen for performance.

The Classical Concert Society (formerly the foa.him Concerts Committee) will give eight concerts, seven consisting of chamber music, at Bechstein Hall, and one of orchestral and choral music, at Queen's Hall (December 9). String quartets by Haydn, Beethoven, Schumann and Brahms are announced for performance, also Beethoven's String trio in G major, Mozart's Trio for pianoforte, clarinet and viola, Dvorák's Pianoforte trio in F minor, Mozart's Quintet for pianoforte and wind instruments, Brahms's Pianoforte quintet, and other works. Schubert's 'Grand Duo' (Op. 140), for pianoforte duet, arranged for full orchestra by Joachim, will be played at the Queen's Hall Concert (it has not been heard in this country since 1876, when it was performed under Mr. Manns at the Crystal Palace), and with the assistance of the Bach Choir, Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' (Schicksalslied), two choruses from 'Belshazzar' (Handel), and the double Concerto for violin and violoncello, by Brahms, will be performed. At the Bechstein Hall Concerts, the Klingler Quartet, led by Joachim's pupil, Karl Klingler, from Berlin, are to make their first appearance.

Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society.—Three concerts are announced—December 4, February 10 (Mendelssohn Centenary concert) and March 31. At the second of these, Max Laistner's choral poem for baritone solo, male chorus and orchestra, will be produced, and Mendelssohn's 'To the Sons of Art' is to be sung. Mr. Allen Gill has been appointed conductor of the orchestra in succession to Mr. Arthur W. Payne, who has efficiently discharged the duties for eleven years. Mr. Munro Davison retains his post as conductor of the Choir.

Broadwood Concerts.—The seventh series (twelve concerts) of these artistic music-makings at Æolian Hall, will include quartet performances by the following Quartet parties: the Walenn, the Brussels, the St. Petersburg, and the Rosé. A concert of choral chamber works, conducted by Dr. Walford Davies, is sure to be interesting.

Brinsmead Popular Concerts.—A series of five popular afternoon concerts, which will 'embody both vocal and instrumental features of the most artistic type,' will be given during the season at St. James's Hall, under the direction of Mr. T. Westlake Morgan.

The Orpheus Choral Society, now in its ninth season, announces three concerts, two of them to be given at the Hampstead Conservatoire. The programmes include compositions by Bach, Handel, Peter Cornelius, Walford Davies, F. H. Cowen, Coleridge-Taylor and some of the older madrigal writers. The conductor is Mr. Claud Powell.

The Invercargill Musical Union (N.Z.) gave its second concert of the season in Victoria Hall on August 31, under the conductorship of Mr. Gray. The chief features of the programme were Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' and Gade's 'Spring's message,' which received a highly creditable rendering by the choir and orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Richards, Miss McIntosh, Mr. A. S. Cookson and Mr. T. Brown.

The Cardiff Harmonic Society gave an admirable rendering of 'St. Paul' on October 21, at the Park Hall. Several of the choral numbers, notably 'Rise up, arise,' 'O great is the depth' and 'The nations are now the Lord's,' were excellently sung. The solo vocalists were Miss Jennie Ellis, Miss Winifred Lewis, Mr. David Ellis and Mr. David Hughes, and Mr. Roderick Williams was an able conductor.

The Southport and Birkdale Philharmonic Society gave its first subscription concert of the twenty-third season on October 21, when the programme included Parry's 'Pied Piper,' Boughton's choral variations on two folk-songs for chorus, and orchestral works by Berlioz, Elgar, and Moszkowski. Under the able conductorship of Mr. A. W. Speed the choir has developed conspicuous ability, and in the unaccompanied works especially excelled themselves.

Mr. Dan Godfrey has issued an interesting prospectus for the fourteenth season of symphony and classical concerts to be given by the municipal orchestra of Bournemouth during the present season. As heretofore, he makes a strong point of including works by British composers in his well-arranged scheme.

A concert of 'Oratorio gems' was given at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-End Road, on September 28, under the conductorship of Mr. G. Day-Winter. The programme included selections from Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' and 'Elijah,' 'Hear my prayer,' the 'Creation,' Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' and Sullivan's 'Festival Te Deum.' The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Marwood and Mr. Samuel Masters.

A concert was given at Waldstein Hall, Forest Gate, on October 19, by the Waldstein Choral and Orchestral Societies, conducted by Mr. F. W. Waggett. The chief feature of the programme was Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' the solo part being sung by Miss F. Douglas. Mr. Waggett was presented by the members of the Society with an oak whitset in token of their appropriation of his efforts. cabinet in token of their appreciation of his efforts.

Mr. Edward Mason's Choir—a Society organised successfully last season with the object of producing principally new works by the younger composers—will perform 'The Blessed Damozel,' by Edgar L. Bainton, the 'Skeleton in Armour,' by Rutland Boughton, and Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' during the coming season.

Errata.—The Stroud Green Choral Association will perform (among other works during the season) Dr. Walford Davies's 'Hervé Riel,' not 'Everyman,' as stated in our last issue (p. 659); and, on p. 645, Sibelius's 'Finlandia' should be deleted from the list of music performed at the Worcester Festival opening service.

Answers to Correspondents.

While we are most anxious to answer questions to the best of our ability, we cannot undertake to send replies by post, nor can we give the names of teachers or concert-agents.

J. R.-For your Mendelssohn lecture you could not do better than consult Sir George Grove's biography in 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' New Edition, making good use of the bibliography at the end. As to the musical illustrations, you must depend upon your resources, but you will probably include some of the 'Songs without words' (Nos. 30 and 43 were composed in England), part-songs, and songs. With regard to the last-named, 'The Garland' was written in London, and Queen Victoria sang 'The Pilgrim's Song' to Mendelssohn's own accompaniment when the composer visited Her Majesty at Buckingham Palace, in 1842 (see The Musical Times of June, 1897, p. 370, for Mendelssohn's letter to his mother, giving a graphic and amusing account of his visit). As 'Elijah' was produced at Birmingham, an excerpt from that oratorio would not be inappropriate. If there is any particular point upon which you need assistance, please let us know.

ENQUIRER.—The information contained in the cutting you send is practically correct. Bach's church cantata 'Wachet, betet' (Watch ye, pray ye) was performed by the Bach Choir at Queen's Hall, April 8, 1897. The Society claimed that this was its first performance in London, but we are unable to say if the work was first heard in England on that occasion.

J. T.—The following are suggested rates of speed: Haydn's Pianoforte sonata in E flat—first movement, crotchet=80; second movement, quaver=80; last movement, minim=84. Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in D song 'He sitteth o'er the water floods.'

(Op. 28)-Allegro, dotted minim = 69; Andante, quaver = 84; Scherzo, dotted minim = 96 (Trio 88); Rondo, dotted DURHAM. -You will find the shakes written out in full in the Cotta edition of Beethoven's Rondo in G (Op. 51) for pianoforte. The Andante section may be played at quaver=96, and the Allegretto at dotted crotchet=94. The speed of Chopin's Mazurka in A flat (Op. 59, No. 2) should be about crotchet = 138.

D.—The death dates you require are as follows: Rev. Thomas Helmore, July 6, 1890; W. S. Rockstro, July 2, 1895; and Hervé (whose real name was Florimond Ronger), November 3, or 4, 1892. The date of the death of Eleazar Genet is not known.

T. P. (Wellington, N.Z.).—In its earliest form Sullivan's tune to 'Onward, Christian soldiers' did not contain the extra notes (common chord of F) in the tenor part of the refrain at the word 'war,' but they were shortly afterwards added by the composer.

M. C.—Without expressing an opinion upon the merits or demerits of the instrument you mention, we think that full benefit from practice' can only be derived by the use of a pianoforte that brings forth sweet sounds when touched by a magic hand.

MECCA.—We think that an orchestra of six players, in addition to the pianoforte, would be rather too small for accompanying a choir of about forty voices in a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast.'

PRELUDE.—Judging from the advertisement columns of journals devoted to music, one of the 'recognized rules of etiquette in the musical profession with regard to advertising ' is to advertise.

A. V. C.—There is no reason why your voice should not be cultivated. You should, however, seek the opinion of a qualified teacher, taking care that your vocal organ is trained and not strained by him.

C. L. S.—You had better apply to conductors of ladies' orchestras. You will find a list and other information in 'The Englishwoman's Year-Book,' under the heading 'Music.'

KENTISH MAID.—An annotated edition, such as the Cotta, covers the ground, especially if it is supplemented by a careful study of Dannreuther's Musical Ornamentation

C. J. McC.—Professor Prout is the author of two treatises on Orchestration, one is in Novello's Primer series, and the other (in two volumes) is published by Messrs. Augener.

J. R. A.—Your London flute is about one hundred years old. We are enquiring about the Manchester instrument. Their intrinsic values are probably not very great.

W. C. W.—No article has appeared in these columns on the organ in the Royal Albert Hall, but we shall be glad to give the specification at some future time.

C. S.—Many thanks for your interesting suggestions in regard to illustrated articles and biographical sketches, which we will gladly bear in mind.

E. A.—As the bass note is an essential note of the harmony, the pedal should be held down throughout the arpeggio.

J. J.—The prices of miniature full scores of oratorios and symphonies vary. Your question is rather too comprehensive.

MUSICAL.—You will be able to obtain three out of the four songs you require through your local music-seller.

A. T. N.—See the reply to W. C. W., substituting Leeds Town Hall for the Kensington building.

W. H.—See answer to C. S. The town you mention is on our list.

T. W. I.—We regret that we cannot trace the sacred

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et catera.

"The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and, as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata."—Learnington Chronicle.

"Bow and Bromley Institute Choir.—The hall was overcrowded "Bow AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. If the verdict of a miscellaneous audience, that could have no possible reason for being favourably prejudiced, is of any account in estimating the merit of a new work, a career that will rival that of the same composer's "Holy City" may be predicted for "The Ten Virgins." That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole. "—The Musical Times.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than "Joan of Arc." Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—
Newcastle Daily Leader.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite "Holy City" we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm."

—Birmingham Daily Gasette.

'In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade,"—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment."—Postypool Free Press.

GEORGE C. MARTIN, Mus.D. (Organist of St. Paul's).

No part of the Church Service has received greater attention in recent years than the Psalms, and there is no better test of an organist's or choirmaster's qualifications than the manner in which the choir renders these matchless poems of Holy Writ.

The chief difficulty of Anglican chanting has always been the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant. In the "Cathedral Psalter," issued a generation ago, an endeavour was made to overcome this difficulty by the use of accent marks, and the striking popularity of the book has proved that the method therein adopted, if rightly used, was nearly perfect.

Experience, however, has shown that there was still room for improvement, and it may confidently be asserted that the nearest approach to perfection has been attained in the entirely revised and improved form of the work entitled the "New Cathedral Psalter."

As the result of much careful study and practical knowledge, all ambiguity in regard to the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant has now been removed.

The "New Cathedral Psalter" is issued in three forms: (i.) with Superimposed Notes; (ii.) with Prosody Signs; (iii.) with Varied Type, whereby a choice can be made of the form which may be thought most effectual in securing intelligent and reverent chanting. Moreover, the pointing is in every case identical, so that on such an occasion as a service sung by combined choirs all three books could, if necessary, be used simultaneously.

Not the least important consideration in a pointed psalter is the matter of typography. In the "New Cathedral Psalter" bolder faced types, specially prepared, have been used, the result being greater clearness, while particular attention has been paid to the spacing between the words and lines so as to afford greater facility in reading.

THE TIMES.

THE TIMES.

The chorus, "Then from her goldstrung loom," is one of the most distinctively beautiful numbers of the cantata. In it the composer uses the melodious theme of the first chorus in a number of imitative passages with rare musical feeling. It is one, perhaps the best, of many beautiful episodes. Scarcely second to it is the soft orchestral ending to the first part, which gives a poetic picture of Andromeda left alone chained to the rock. "The choir of the mystical sea-maids," too, is charming, none the less so for an obvious family likeness to the Rhine-maidens, and a stronger one to the sirens in Stanford's "Voyage of Maeldune."

and a stronger one to the sirens in Stanford's "Voyage of Maeldune."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Thanks to Mr. Cyril Rootham, who has intimate relations with Bristol, a work of light and leading was produced such as chased dulness and darkness from the festival premises, and restored a lost equanimity.

. Mr. Rootham has given us a cantata well made, interesting, and pleasant to hear, and indicative of powers which may serve higher purposes in the future. What chiefly impressed me as I listened to the work was the thought that in "Andromeda" we have a happy compromise between the old and the new—between that which has been and that which is. . . Mr. Rootham is clearly not one of the many composers who believe that music is formless sound varied by "colour," and governed by no laws in particular. He walks in a better and more assured path, neither losing himself nor leading those who trust themselves to his guidance into sloughs and bogs. His orchestration by no means lacks taste, which is perhaps shown by the restraint imposed upon it. upon it.

MORNING POST.

Mr. Cyril Rootham has taken Charles Kingsley's poem for his theme, and round the story of the sacrifice of Andromeda and her rescue by Perseus has contrived a musical decoration that constitutes no contemptible effort. . . . He is successful at many points in creating a real atmosphere—an exceptional capability at a period of musical development when indiscriminate use is made of device in order to secure that effect. Mr. Rootham's use of it, however, is particularly well directed, and shows no small power. In his orchestral writing Mr. Rootham shows as sure a hand as any of the young composers, and in this direction muchamay be expected of him. His choral work shows a good knowledge of effect, and the ability to produce it by legitimate means, employed with a care not often shown to-day. . . There is great promise in this effort, and promise that is based on the excellent foundation of an ability to characterise. . . The orchestral interludes always convey that which they are intended to express, and show excellent command of orchestral effect.

YORKSHIRE POST.

YORKSHIRE POST.

His melody is not only pleasing but appropriate, and though here, as elsewhere, I am unable as yet to discern a distinct personality in his music, I think no less of it at present for this. . . Mr. Rootham's music is sympathetic and practicable, and accordingly it met with a really finished and sympathetic performance.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

There is an attractive open-air quality in his music which is not wholly attributable to the example of his teacher, Sir Charles Stanford. He has a better command of choral effect than of orchestral devices, though there are some happy points in his score, and his writing for the solo voices is occasionally effective in the best sense. A very hopeful feature of the work is the fact that its second half is vastly stronger than the fact.

the first.

BRISTOL TIMES AND MIRROR.

The short bit of introductory symphony fell gratefully on the ear. A good deal of vigour was forthcoming in the opening chorus, where at once the composer displays his skill in orchestration, as well as in dramatic writing, for a body of voices.

The chorus, "The heart of the mother," is a charming bit of writing, the voices being unaccompanied, and the lovely page and a half of symphony with which the first division of the work ends is exceedingly capitating. A burst of applause at this juncture showed that the work had caught and held the attention of the assemblage, and so far gained their goodwill.

The laughing of the sea-maidens is the brightest and most melodious chorus in the work, and its beauty is enhanced by a very haunting figure in the orchestra. "Over the mountain," for choir, is intensely dramatic, illustrating, as the music is intended, the noises of the sea and the wind, and the gloom of the darkness. . Skill as is the structure of the final chorus, "Blissful, they turned," the opening and closing sections are most charming, because of their melodiousness, the final sentence being musically the best in the whole work. Eleven bars of symphony conclude the work, which took a few minutes more than an hour to perform.

ENGLAND, MY ENGLAND

THE MUSIC BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS NET. Full Score and Orchestral Parts, MS.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It is robust in character and strenuous in expression, replete with the spirit of the words. . . . The song, which, apart from its poetic connection, is of real musical merit, should have a fortunate career.

MORNING POST.

Dr. Brewer has written many vocal pieces for orchestra, and in his choice of the medium of displaying his powers shows wise restraint. The present work forms an interesting composition, in which voice and orchestra have an equal share. The music succeeds well in describing the poem, and shows a considerable knowledge of effect.

THE ATHENÆUM.

The other novelty was a song, "England, my England," by Dr. A. H. Brewer, who has set Henley's fine rhetoric to bold, straightforward strains; he provides, too, a stirring orchestral accompaniment.

THE SUNDAY TIMES AND SUNDAY SPECIAL.

Dr. A. H. Brewer is very happy in catching the full-blooded vigour of the words.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It has the true patriotic ring, but yet is without that touch of arrogancy which makes the cheap type of music-hall patriotism.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

It is a setting to the patriotic poem of W. E. Henley, and expresses the loyalty and devotion of England's sons to the motherland. The song, with its full orchestral accompaniment, expresses that sentiment in music of a broad, healthy, strenuous character. It has a strength and individuality that should make it distinctive and popular.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.

The music is melodious, broad, graphic, and yet simple, and, in short, possesses all the qualities needed to ensure long life.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

This is no flamboyant effusion of patriotism, but a careful, studied attempt to portray the spirit of the words and their deeper meaning with dignity and sincerity. It should be successful wherever it is sung.

A novelty in the shape of two short pieces by the orchestra, by Dr. Brewer, entitled "Age and Youth." . . . it is light in character, pleasantly written, and well-scored.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Capital pieces these, which, written for small orchestra, are likely to be heard in the concerts of amateur societies, for they are graceful, simple, and unpretentious—the one placid, the other cheery, and both neatly written.

STANDARD.

Dr. Brewer weaves his orchestral texture very gracefully. . . . The latter is the most striking of the two sketches, as the music has more grip and strength, while the contrapuntal treatment is clever and ingenious.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

A very agreeable little orchestral piece by Mr. Herbert Brewer, entitled "Age and Youth," a couple of dainty vignettes, sketched with a light and delicate touch, and contrasting favourably with many of the more ambitious productions of our young lions.

Graceful in expression and ingenious in orchestration, "Age" is treated in the form of a minuet. . . . The music has an old-world feeling, and is delicately scored for a small orchestra. "Youth" is in the form of a gigue, . . . It is scored more fully than "Age," and has more emotional strength.

YORKSHIRE DAILY POST.

"Age" is represented by a piece in minuet measure, but although the minuet is associated with a distant past, and perhaps with dancers of a mature period of life, there is nothing suggesting decrepitude in the music, which, on the contrary, is pleasingly gay and sedately graceful. "Youth" is illustrated by a jig, the principal subject of which is first announced fugally, commencing with the bass strings, the exposition of the theme rising up the scale of the strings until the wood-wind take up the subject and frolic with it in youthful fashion. . . The bright pieces were much applauded, and may be recommended to the attention of amateur orchestral societies.

BIRMINGHAM DALLY POST.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

Here all is lightness and easy grace. To Mr. Brewer there is nothing harsh or crabbed about age, and his vision of youth is unalloyed gaiety and high spirits. Age is represented by a graceful minuet, and youth by a rollicking jig. There is not a touch in Mr. Brewer of the ambition that o'erleap itself and falls on the other side, but, within its limits, his music is a model of elegance and dexterity.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE CHRONICLE.

In the coming winter these dainty trifles, which so cleverly convey in music the vagaries of age and youth, will no doubt be heard many times in various parts of the country possessing an orchestral society.

BEYOND THESE VOICES THERE IS PEACE

FOR SOPRANO AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts, 10s.

THE TIMES.

THE TIMES.

Like the prelude to "The Love that casteth out Fear," that of the new work is made up of two themes—one a restless theme of rusged outline and chromatic harmony associated with the weariness of life, the second a beautiful melody for the violoncello, which speaks of the peace beyond the voices of the world. . . After it the chorus breaks in with the words, "What profit hath man of all his labour." Parry uses the chorus here as only he can use it, making each voice declaim the words with extraordinary fitness. . . The central movement is perhaps the most original in the cantata. It is a chorus on the words, "To everything there is a season, a time for every purpose under Heaven, a time to be born, and a time to die," and the words are sung above a theme for the strings in C major of wonderfully comforting expression. The orchestral music reminds one of a Bach aria, so gracious is its flow and so beautifully is it knit together. It works to a wonderful climax at the words, "A time to love, a time to hate, a time for war," and is concluded softly by the chorus with the words "A time for peace."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In his music Sir Hubert make modest use of the representative theme, and aims mostly at melodic strains and orchestral effects of singular force. The word "force" is not here used as synonymous with noise in expressing the sentiment of the text.

MORNING POST.

Sir Hubert Parry's work shows all those good qualities of musician-like writing and skilled treatment which are always associated with his name, and his customary vigour was not wanting. . . . It is in the choral numbers that the real character is expressed. In his disposition of the parts in the chorus "To everything there is a season," Sir Hubert Parry shows his wonted skill and demonstrates once more that as a choral writer he stands pre-eminent as a worthy representative of a form of art in which this country has an excellent reputation, and one which works such as this help to maintain.

DAILY NEWS.

The principal feature of this work is its reflective nature. Once again Sir Hubert Parry has proved the value of this class of text for musical illustration. . . The choral writing remains, as ever, strong and effective, with a great deal of fugal episode, done in his best

DAILY CHRONICLE.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

There are many of Sir Hubert Parry's admirers who will regard this as one of the most attractive of his shorter works. It certainly is an impressive composition, with fine choruses, effective solo passages, and brilliant orchestration, and it is a worthy addition to the library of the best class of British music. Moreover, it is easy to prophesy popularity for it among those many ambitious choral societies in London and the provinces that appreciate really fine motets.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Here, it will be seen, is a subject exactly suited to Sir Hubert Parry's gift for reflective musical utterance, and he has given us in this work yet another example of dignified and restrained writing. The choruses, largely built up on the imitational style of which the composer is a complete master, are of due variety and of certainty of effect.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The chorus-writing generally is as usual of the strong four-square type of which the composer is such a master. . . The mere texture of the part-writing has interest, while its dramatic strength and appropriateness are undeniable. The impression one gains from a first hearing of "Beyond these voices there is Peace" is that the text is a noble one, and in its sense of contrast and dignity of expression well worthy of a musical setting.

GUARDIAN.

TIMES.

TIMES.

In form the suite is very simple. Each of the six little movements is made up of two contrasting musical ideas which alternate without any attempt at development. . . . In "The Little Bells" (scherzino) we of course expect and get plenty of glockenspiel and toy effects, but the chief theme has a merry ring which is not dependent only on such things. "Moths and Butterflies" and "Fountain Dance" illustrate pretty fancies daintily, and lastly we have "The Tame Bear" and "The Wild Bears." It is a whirling dance movement which, played with all the nervous energy with which the composer inspires the orchestra, completely carried the audience away. This popular ending alone would probably ensure its success.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Of the six trifles that go to make up the suite, the scherzino "Little Bells" and the particularly graceful "Fountain Dance" are worthy of the Biret of "L'Arlésienne," than which no higher praise can be accorded.

MORNING POST.

A set of six numbers which gave unalloyed delight to the audience this evening. There is little doubt that the simplicity of design is immensely becoming. The resourceful and experienced treatment it receives is by no means wasted upon the material, but the fact serves to illustrate once again the advantage of an absence of complication in design. Such a plan leaves the invention of the composer a clearer field, and the result of such a combination of youth and middle age is to give a work that possesses more vitality than many a more complicated effort. There is much quaintness in all the numbers. The march has some wonderful modulations, the date of which it would be interesting to know.

STANDARD.

They show originality and fancy in both treatment and design. Their simplicity is their strength; it takes a genius to be truly simple. We would not destroy these musical "etchings"; they have their place in the portfolio along with the greater works.

The music is beautifully finished in every detail, and there is present all the grace attaching to the composer's style. The best movements are the second, entitled "The Little Bells," which is extremely pretty; the fourth, called "Fountain Dance," which certainly gives a picture of uprising water; and the impetuous finale, described as the "Wild Bears." This had to be repeated. Indeed, its vigorous flow had something irresistible about it thing irresistible about it.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Sir Edward Elgar's new "Wand of Youth" suite is evidently going to be a great favourite with the London public. Queen's Hall was crowded last night on the occasion of its second performance, and the fanciful grace and dainty orchestration of the charming little series of musical vignettes roused quite as much enthusiasm as at the first performance on Saturday afternoon.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The suite as a whole is brilliantly effective and has in the case of the "Moths and Butterflies" and "The Fountain Dance" two movements of very genuine musical charm.

ATHENÆUM.

Speaking of the Suite generally, we think it is far more attractive than its predecessor. Composers do well at times to unbend, and to show themselves in a light mood, especially in the case of Sir Edward Elgar, who has devoted much to music of a serious order.

GUARDIAN.

They are almost perfect specimens of light music, most delicately fashioned, and replete with simple tunefulness and engaging touches of humour. . . The "Fountain Dance" is exquisitely graceful, and the riotous fun of "The Wild Bears" makes an eshilarating finale to the suite, and would assuredly never fail to bring down the most apathetic house.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

It contains six short numbers, all of which are very dainty and fascinating, full of quaint and fertile imagination and orchestrated albeit lightly, still plainly in Sir Edward's mature style. . . The performance was eminently successful.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The six short pieces of which the present Suite consists, are fresh, fanciful and full of brilliant and happy orchestral touches. The lightness of touch is delightful and the energetic and rhythmical music is rarely, if ever, oppressed by its new and gorgeous dress.

For a century or more the vast majority of English children have been brought up in total ignorance of the racial and traditional folk-music of their own country. It is significant that, during that period, the musical taste of the educated classes has become more and more cosmopolitan, while that of the lewer classes, at any rate in the towns, has been degraded to the level of the unlovely song of the street. Obviously the remedy is to restore the English folk-song to those to whom it belongs by right of inheritance.

Fortunately it still is possible to recover the songs themselves; indeed, many collectors have been and are engaged upon this necessary and useful work. The next step is to select the best of these, to arrange and publish them in a suitable and inexpensive form, and so place them within the reach of the teachers of primary and secondary schools throughout the country. That is the purpose of this Series, of which these songs collected in Somerset are the first instalment.

The Scandinavian mythology, which is the most ancient in the world next after the Hindu, is recorded in the shape of short songs (hijod or quida) in alliterative verse. The lyric tendency subsists in all the nusic which modern Scandinavian composers have as yet put forth, and to those who regard some manifestations of to-day as decadent, these will appear as a breakwater to stem the tide. In Finland, which is a country where Mongolian national traits are mixed with Scandinavian, has arisen the latest compact school of composition; essentially lyrical, while with a peculiar rough power of its own. By universal consent Jean Sibelius (b. 1865); is the chief representative thereof. In respect of original genius he stands as much alone in Scandinavian countries, as does Richard Strauss in Germany. See a very efficient article on Sibelius by Duncan Hume in Grove's Dictionary, new edition. See complete appreciation of the life and works in "Jean Sibelius, a Finnish composer," by Rosa Newmarch, Breitkopf & Härtel, 1s., the best monograph on the subject. Also the same translated into German by Ludmille Kirschbaum, Breitkopf & Härtel, 1s.

Of the eight pieces selected for this Album, two are short pianoforte pieces, one is a folk-song arranged by Sibelius, one is a scherzo from a pianoforte sonata, two are choral works arranged, and two are orchestral ditto. They give an excellent idea of Sibelius's powers. One is the well-known march from the "Karelia" suite; one a Finnish folk-song, managed in exceedingly quaint fashion. The Tyrtæus-like war song, "Song of the Athenians," originally for boys' and men's voices in unison, with brass and percussion, is the fine-a conception yet made by any composer for representing the ancient Greek sentiment with modern resources. The way in which ordinary modern 8-bar rhythms are made to give the effect of ancient non-rhythm, thus binding the new world with the old, is a masterpiece of lyrical con

Sonatas and Partitas for Violin alone. Edited by JOSEPH JOACHIM and ANDREAS MOSER. Two Books

The unaccompanied violin solo music of J. S. Bach has been previously edited; see Vol. 6 of the chamber music in the Bach Society edition, Breitkopf & Härtel, 1877; also Breitkopf & Härtel's edition in separate numbers for general use. The late Joseph Joachim (1831-1907), was urged for many years by his pupils and colleagues at the Berlin Royal School for Musical Execution to prepare an edition embodying his own unrivalled interpretation of these works. His chief collaborator in such tasks was his pupil Andreas Moser (b. 1859), since 1888 teacher at the High School, and writer of a biography of Joachim for the Jubilee celebrating, in 1809, his 60th year of artistic work (authorised English translation with additions, 1901, by Lilla Durham). With Moser, Joachim had issued an edition, bowed and phrased, of Beethoven's string quartets and a Violin School. At the extreme end of his life he undertook with Moser the desired edition of the Bach Violin solo works, and they are here, as regards the great violinist, posthumously presented.

The edition is founded on an autograph MS., the property of the widow of Wilhelm Rust, of Leipzig (1822-1892), from 1980 Cantor of Thomasschule, editor of 18 volumes of the Bach Society's Edition; now in the care of Dr. Erich Prieger, 127 Coblenzerstrasse, Bonn. A photographic facsimile of the wonderfully clear, bold and beautiful autograph of the Adagio of the first sonata is given on page t. The exact original is shown on a lower stave in somewhat smaller notes. The upper stave contains Joachim's bowings, phrasings, execution of the graces, fingerings, &c. Some excellent hints relating to style and tempo are given in the Preface.

THE BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL. October 14, 15, 16, 17.

This festival still maintains its importance as a leading event of its type. Similar festivals held in neighbouring towns seem not to affect its popularity. In fact some of the other events are regarded by many competitors as stepping-stones to Blackpool. To win in an important class at Blackpool is an enviable distinction. How is it that this festival has won its remarkable position? Many reasons might be assigned. We are inclined to say that the prime cause of its success is owing to the public appreciation of the unquestionably educational character of the scheme, and the excellence of the management, which, it should be noted, is honorary. A glance at the programme for the four days and a perusal of a recently-issued little pamphlet, which gives a complete list of the pieces introduced during the existence of the festival, should convince the most hardened sceptic as to the value of the competitive festival movement when the aims are first and foremost artistic.

The existence of considerable natural and acquired capacity in the wide district catered for, and the almost pathetic desire of the possessors of this capacity to find a vent, and to measure themselves with others, are also vital factors in the success of the gathering.

To say that the desire for monetary reward is the attraction is untrue and unjust. About 400 adult singers entered for the solo-singing competitions. The music to be prepared demanded much study and capacity, and probably involved many competitors in the cost of professional tuition. Yet the first prize in each class was £1 118. 6d.! It is true that the winners in the eight classes sang afterwards for a rose bowl, the possession of which is a symbol of faithful work done, and an inspiration to future exertion.

One of the most important achievements of the festival was the concert given by the specially-organized festival choir, under the able conductorship of Mr. Herbert Whittaker. The success of this experiment may lead to greater things being accomplished at Blackpool. The choral programme was as follows:

"A Festival Hymn" C. Lee Williams. Folk-Song "The Barkshire Tragedy" Rutland and Boughton. Variations "King Arthur" Motet for double choir, "Sing ye to the Lord" All these works were sung unaccompanied, and therefore severely tested the mettle and general capacity of the newly-formed combination. choir was not well-balanced, the tenors being rather weak. But the tone quality was excellent. The Festival Hymn was smoothly and effectively sung; the first of the folk-song settings was not so well performed as the second. The Bach motet was splendidly sung. It was evident that Mr. Whittaker, with great judgment, had determined to secure an adequate performance of this noble work. It was gratifying to witness the enthusiasm of the choir, and to hear that the members rehearsed it with joy.

Other items in the concert were interesting performances by prize solo singers of previous years. Two boys, Joe Smith, of Stockport, and Brian Williams, of Mr. Bates's London School for Choristers, may be specially mentioned because they exhibited remarkable talent. A strong feature of the programme was the playing of Miss Dorothy Bridson (violin) and Miss Elsie Horne (pianoforte). They played together in the A major Sonata by Brahms and C minor Sonata by Grieg, and Miss Horne gave a fine performance of the Scherzo in C sharp minor by Chopin.

by Chopin.

The music in the chief choral classes was, as usual, of the highest kind. Following the rule of this festival, none of the four mixed-voice and the three male-voice pieces had been used as tests before at Blackpool. It is remarkable that the two finest pieces were "O wild west wind" in the mixed-voice class and "The Reveille" in the male-voice (tenor lead) class. Both pieces were composed by Sir Edward Elgar this year, and they represent his latest, if not his last word, in part-songs. They are deeply impressive.

The results of the various competitions are given below. We regret that we have not the space to add more criticisms of the various performances.

THE CHILDREN'S DAYS.

Two days were devoted to the juniors. There were twelve vocal classes, eight instrumental classes, and one for Maypole dancing.

Individual sight-singing was tested in two classes, one for staff notation and the other for tonic sol-fa. Two lads, Bert Shawcross (Manchester), and Harold Makinson (Casterton) sang the tests with supreme ease, relying solely upon a keen absolute pitch faculty. Neither of the boys had much voice. When Shawcross came forward he was given a test in the key of E flat, but Dr. McNaught pitched it low in order not to ask for pitches beyond the boy's compass. But Shawcross was at once embarrassed, and stated that he could not sing the test in the key given. He then re-pitched it himself quite accurately. As a matter of interest, his ear was also tested by chords on the pianoforte. All the notes were at once correctly named, except a high chord of the diminished seventh. Equal first-prizes were awarded to the two lads. In the tonic sol-fa section none of the singing was particularly good. Elsie Kirby, of Blackpool, was awarded the prize. She obtained 55 marks out of roo maximum.

RRMARKS.

BARROW.—(a) A fine tread of rhythm. Enunciation excellent. Clean, refined tone, except that the bass inclined to "oo." Attack and ensemble first-rate. (b) Rich resonance. Considerable vitality. Some slight over-accentuation. A brainy interpretation. (c) Fine, rich tone. Cantabile where called for very attractive. A fine, big climax secured and much of the mood caught. (d) A vigorous interpretation. A slight tendency to staccato where legato or sostenuto would have been better. Beautiful tone. Some splendidly effective passages. Some of the moods not found. The very difficult change to D major near the end not quite happy SOUTHPORT.—(a) Great finish, pure blend, pellucid flow of tone. Obvious ease and mastery. The fine bass passage, p. 6, splendidly brought out. Vowels always well defined. Kept pitch. (b) Fine tone and impressive interpretation. Once there was momentary indecision. The dovetailing of the antiphonal effects well managed. A dignified and broad performance. (c) Deeply expressive. Tone beautifully blended. Poetry in the interpretation. (d) Vivid and exciting. Missed some called-for emotional intensity. Trebles somewhat shrill in places. A fine performance. Kept the pitch.

Isle of Man.—(a) Clean finished, but not so resonant as Southport. Syncopations not quite firm. A slightly intrusive tenor tone. The end pages were finely sung. (b) A big tone and style. Not a complete unity, the tenor tone again standing out. Some unsteadiness in attack and some small errors of time. Highly spirited.
(c) Tone at first sweetly resonant and the delivery duly tender. Soon began to lose pitch, and the low bass notes became impossible. Lost nearly a tone. (d) There was much to admire. A wide gamut of emotion was displayed. Not always note-perfect. Trebles were excellent. Much insight shown. On the whole the best performance of the part-song, notwithstanding some faults.

SALFORD.—(a) Rich tone, somewhat too freely poured out occasionally. Trebles slightly tart in places. The rhythmic tread not unanimous: this was felt most on Near the end the over-strenuousness led to some roughness, and the execution lost grace. (b) The antiphonal bond not clean. On the whole, spirited and fluent, but dignity and breadth were not as they should be-conspicuous.

Valley.—(a) Very good style for madrigal Some delicate points and good judgment in proportioning tone-force. Tenors need COLNE VALLEY. singing. displayed in proportioning tone-force. Tenors need watching. A fair blend. (b) Slow. Rhythm ponderous and laboured. Some breadth and massiveness. The attack wavered occasionally. On the whole not interpretative.

MILNSBRIDGE.—(a) Very artistic treatment and high finish. Enunciation first-rate. Tone very good; fresh, bright quality. Unity conspicuous. No exaggerations. (b) Fell off considerably in tone and treatment. Some loose attack, and the antiphonal effects casually linked. Some well-calculated effects. On the whole, not at all impressive.

BLACKPOOL. — (a) Smooth and beautiful, yet rather veiled. Something lacking in the style, which appeared to need conviction. The technique was excellent, but there was no special distinction in the performance.

(b) Tone fine, and style duly broad. Balance of the two choirs not good. Second choir too weak relatively. The antiphonal bond well contrived. Difficult to find fault with the technique, but some necessary inward fire was missing. (c) Pathetic start, just secured the right subtle tint. Began to lose pitch. Bass became impossible, and consequently the chords were incomplete. The best feature, the correctness of the mood. (d) An unequal performance. There were some stirring moments. Some of the unreasoning, insistent turbulence of the wind realized. The impetuosity demanded was often there. The D major section (last page) not well in tune, but the return to E flat was correct. Some loose attack.

LANCASTER.—(a) Beautifully pure and clean. Many graces, and the rhythm accent delicate and firm. Just graces, and the rhythm accent deficate and fifth Just a suspicion of undue staccato. (b) Broadly conceived at first, got too fast and rather feverish. Lost dignity. Some good technical points. (c) Tranquil mood, with some very effective bursts of passion. Intonation not secure. An important climax missed. Fell in pitch, and the low bass became impossible. Lost a tone. (d) Voices not resonant enough for the amazing turbulence of the piece. Some beautiful legato. Elsewhere some gingerly attack. The D major passage not correct. A brisk performance, with many good points.

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (Sight-test). Eight entries. 1st. Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. H. Whittaker).

2nd. Mr. Aldous' Choir, Lancaster (Mr. J. W. Aldous).

3rd. Colne Valley Vocal Union (Mr. T. E. Pearson).

STRING ORCHESTRAS.

Test: "Prière aux Anges Gardiens" (Liszt").

FULL ORCHESTRAS.

Test: Symphony, "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn). Result in both competitions:

1st. Nelson Congregational Orchestra (Mr. C. Townsley).
2nd. Huddersfield Symphony Society (Mr. Arthur W. Kaye).

The adjudicators were Dr. W. G. McNaught, Mr. Harry Evans, Mr. Allen Gill, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Dan Price, Mr. Paul Vallon, Mr. Landon Ronald, Mr. C. H. Fogg, Mr. W. Granger, and Mr. W. McNaught.

On the Sunday evening after the Festival, "Calvary," a new oratorio by Mr. Clifford Higgin, was produced at the Winter Gardens under the direction of the composer. There was a band and chorus of 200 performers, and the principals were Miss Perceval Allen and Mr. Hamilton Harriss. Mr. Higgin is a well-known local professor, and naturally the performance drew a large audience. The new work is melodious and pleasing as music, but its prettiness is often incongruous with the great solemnity of its topic. Mr. Higgin's methods and idioms suggest that his forts lies in the direction of secular subjects rather than in that of oratorio.

THE CO-OPERATIVE UNION (N.W. SECTION), SHEFFIELD.

September 26.

This is an annual autumn event held in turn at various towns in the North of England.

Twelve choirs entered the competition for the challenge shield, and none failed to be present. The test-pieces were "The dawn of song" (Bairstow), and "Judge me, O God" (Mendelssohn). The following is a list of the competing choirs, showing the four prize-winners:

4th. Accrington and Church (Mr. E. Whittaker). Bingley (Mr. T. H. Salter).

Blackley (Mr. F. Sherriff).
Bolton (Mr. R. S. Taylor).

1st. Bradford, City of (Mr. H. Robertshaw).
Brightside and Carbrook, Sheffield (Mr. G. E. Kitching).

2nd. Burnley (Mr. D. Duxbury). Failsworth (Mr. John E. Smith). Handsworth Woodhouse (Mr. J. M. Thurston). Huddersfield, Mr. D. W. Evans. 3rd. Runcorn and Widnes (Mr. H. Berrey). York (Mr. A. Hopkins).

Bradford sang with fine tone and moving expression, and gave little loophole for criticism. Burnley had beautiful tone, especially in the basses; they gave a fine interpretation of the part-song, but were less convincing in the anthem. Runcorn and Widnes also sang with beautiful tone, especially in the soprano and alto parts, and attack, rhythm and expression were good. Accrington and Church were a trifle too declamatory in the anthem, but they gave an expressive performance of the part-song.

At the evening concert, which included quartet and duet competitions, the four winning choirs combined to sing the two test-pieces, conducted by Dr. McNaught, the adjudicator. The event was one of the most successful ever organized by the Society. The arrangements made for the entry and exit of the choirs were excellent, and there was no unnecessary delay. The secretary is Mr. T. Horrocks.

NOTTINGHAM.

October 17, 24.

The first day of this festival was very successful. In the male-voice choir class there were thirteen entries. All sang in the afternoon, and the best six sang again in the evening. The marks obtained by the selected choirs were as follows:

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS. CHALLENGE SHIELD CLASS. Tests: "The young musician" (Kucken); "Evening' (Leslie); "Hushed in death" (Henry Hiles).

2nd Pye Hill (221). Bulwell Apollo.

Sheffield Glee and Madrigal (232). rst

3rd Rugby (216).

Bullwell Orpheus.

Carlton and Netherfield. Hathem. Sheffield I.L. Party (212). Boots Choral Union. Raunds Adult School.

Oceanic (Northampton).

Owing to an unfortunate error, the Boots Choral Union was excluded from the final competition, although they were entitled to sing. It says much for the good feeling inspired by the officials of the festival that the conductor of the choir has accepted the explanation without offence.

Four children's choirs sang, and all showed good training and capacity. The test-pieces and results were as follows:

Tests: (a) Two-part song "Autumn" (Mendelssohn);
(b) Any part of the cantata "The hare and the tortoise" (Gaul).

Queen's Walk Girls', Nottingham (157). 2nd Coventry Road, Bulwell (151)

3rd Nottingham Junior Choral Society (129). 4th Mansfield P.M. (123).

There were also classes for solo-singing (tenor, bass, and children), violin and pianoforte playing and quartets. Mr. H. Brown, of Nottingham, gained the bass solo prize, and Mr. W. Slack, of Sheffield, that for the tenor solo. Miss M. W. Elliott, of Chesterfield, won the girls' solo prize and L. Dobney that for the boys. The adjudicators were Mr. Granville Humphreys and Mr. Arthur Barlow.

A combined performance of Gaul's cantata "The our September number, the results in the class for hare and the tortoise" was given by the children under church choirs was omitted. They were as follows: the direction of Mr. C. E. Riley.

(A report of the proceedings on October 24 will be given in our next issue.)

THE WORCESTERSHIRE COMPETITION.

KIDDERMINSTER, MAY 11, 12, 1909.

THE above is henceforward to be the title of what has existed for the past fourteen years as the Madresfield musical competition.

This change indicates an important alteration in the boundaries of the competition, which previously included, in addition to the southern part of Worcestershire, portions of Gloucestershire and Herefordshire, but which now become identical with those of the county of Worcester.

The competition has usually been held at Malvern, but in order to bring it within easy reach of the northern part of the county, now for the first time included, it will take place in 1909 at Kidderminster, on May 11 and 12.

It is hoped that the Worcestershire musical competition will receive a warm welcome and hearty support not only from the musicians of the county, but from all persons interested in the social welfare of the great community now appealed to. A strong effort will be made to establish the festival on a firm footing by attracting the working class element of the population, from which such admirable results have been obtained in other parts of England. The honorary secretary is Miss M. F. Bromley-Martin, Sarn Hill, Tewkesbury.

NORTH-EAST OF SCOTLAND FESTIVAL, ABERDEEN.

June 4, 5, 1909.

The following is a list of the test-pieces selected by the committee. It will be seen that the programme is an exceptionally good one for a new festival. It includes many pieces that have been favourite tests at English competitions: PART-SONGS AND MADRIGALS.

THE EHREMAYER SYSTEM OF PIANOFORTE SIGHT-PLAYING, three months of a few minutes' daily practice will enable any person of average capabilities to play readily at first sight any piece not beyond his or her executive powers.

The System owes its success to its simple application of certain fundamental-but hitherto neglected-scientific principles.

"Dear Sir.—I thank you for the lesson received on Saturday. The instructions and hints will be most helpful. My difficulty has been mainly sluggish reading especially with the full chords of composers such as Beethoven and Chopin, and some of the modern ones; but have made considerable progress since perusing your Course, and no doubt am only just beginning to reap the benefit. . . . It will give me great pleasure if at any time I can recommend your System. Thanking you for your kind attention. you for your kind attention,

ETON COLLEGE.

Ye distant Spires, ye antique Towers, That crown the wat'ry Glade, Where grateful Science still adores Her Henry's holy Shade; And ye that from the stately Brow Of WINDSOR'S Heights th' Expanse below Of Grove, of Lawn, of Mead survey, Whose Turf, whose shade, whose Flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along His Silver-winding Way.

Ode on a distant prospect of Eton College. 1747. THOMAS GRAY (An Etonian).

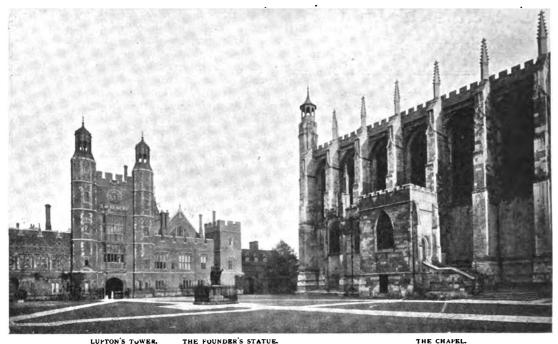

King Henry the Sixth had not completed his nineteenth year when he founded 'The Kynge's College of our Ladye of Eton, beside Windsore.' Born at Windsor, the boy monarch naturally desired that his noble conception should be placed within the range of his vision, and under the shadow of the castle in which he drew his first who founded Winchester College and New College, Oxford, the one being a nursery, so to speak, of the other. Thus the gentle and saintly scholarking did for Cambridge what the eminent ecclesiastic had done for Oxford. The original charter of Eton - dated October 11, 1440-decreed that the College was to consist of 'a Provost, ten Fellows, four Clerks, six Choristers, a Schoolmaster, twenty-five poor and indigent Scholars, and the same number of poor and infirm men.'

To quote further from Sir Henry Maxwell Lyte's History of Eton College (1889): 'This scheme may be said to have united the characteristics of a college of secular priests, a school for boys, and an almshouse for poor men. The Almshouses were suppressed during the Founder's own lifetime; the College of priests, after more than four centuries of honourable existence, has lately been doomed to destruction; while the School has gradually risen to an unrivalled pitch of prosperity, and has practically monopolised the revenues and the very name of Eton College."

To return to the original Statutes. The four Clerks were to be 'skilled in chant, of whom one only, the organist and instructor of the choristers, may be married.' All the Clerks were to receive 'commons and livery,' and the stipend of the organist was fixed at £6. The Scholars were to be 'poor and needy boys of good character, with breath. In founding Eton College and its a competent knowledge of reading, of the grammar complement, King's College, Cambridge, Henry of Donatus, and of plain song.' It is very followed the good example of William of Wykeham, interesting thus to find that music (plain song) was one of the three essentials required for all boys now been resumed. who came to Eton. By undoubtedly formed part of the original curriculum, only to be ignored through a long period of years; now, however, it rightly assumes its place in the list of studies, and the warm encouragement the art receives from the present Head Master (the Hon. and Rev. E. Lyttelton) is nothing more or less than a return to the intentions of the Founder of this splendid College which has become one of the greatest educational institutions of the country.

As a matter of convenience this brief sketch may be divided thus (1), history of the School; (2), its buildings; (3), the College Library; (4), the Chapel Services, and (5), the musical curriculum.

The School was opened in the year 1442. Its first Head Master was William Waynflete, founder of Magdalen College, Oxford. He was a great favourite with Henry VI., who induced him to exchange the headmastership of Winchester College for that of Eton. Waynflete accordingly came to Eton, bringing with him five Fellows and thirty-five scholars from Winchester, who thus formed the nucleus of a school which has in course of time developed into its present state of prosperity and The first Provost was Henry Sever, the duties of chairman of the governing body, or of the Long Chamber, whence it was removed by to be more accurate, 'The Provost and Fellows,' to be more accurate, 'The Provost and Fellows,'

In Chapel the Provost inference, music occupies the first stall on the south side, and the Vice-Provost the corresponding one on the north side.

The boys on the Foundation are called Collegers. Sir Henry Maxwell Lyte says that the earliest known instance of the use of the term Oppidans boys who live in the houses of their tutors (assistant masters)—is in the Audit Book for 1557-58, which contains a charge 'for two newe chandlestycks for the opydans in the Churche, ijs. vjd.' Mr. Wasey Sterry states that 'their [i.e., the Oppidans'] original style was "Commensales." These Commensales seem to have been of two orders, corresponding to commoners and gentlemen-commoners at Oxford; they were to be admitted to board and lodge in the College, paying therefor, but to be instructed in grammar gratis.' * William Paston (died 1466) was one of the earliest Oppidans (Commensales), as was probably also Sir Thomas Pope (1507? 1559), founder of Trinity College, Oxford.

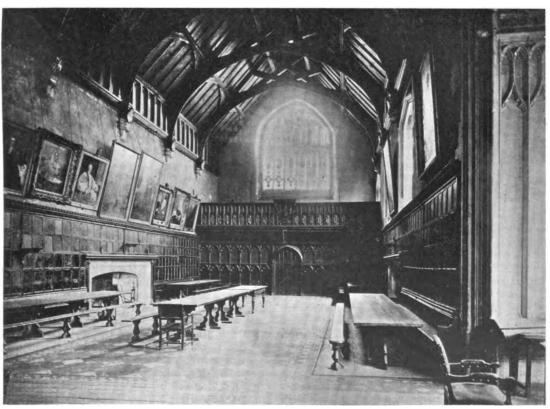

At that time (the 16th century) the title Custos (or dunce) was applied to any boy who was detected talking in English during lesson time, missing three words in repeating a rule in grammar, or making three mistakes in spelling. As at Winchester, the Eton Scholars were chaplain and almoner to Henry VI., and afterwards awakened at five o'clock by one of the præpostors Warden of Merton College, Oxford. And here it (monitors), who shouted 'Surgite.' While dressing should be stated that the important office of they chanted prayers, probably Latin psalms in Provost (since 1884 successfully held by the Rev. alternate verses. Each boy had to make his own Dr. Hornby, a former Head Master) carries with it bed, and to sweep the dust from it into the middle four juniors selected for the purpose by the (the Translation of King Edward the Confessor) præpostors. When these chambermaid duties had and Easter, the boys had to rise at four o'clock been discharged, the scholars marched downstairs two and two to wash at the 'children's pump.' Their ablutions ended, they at once proceeded to their places in the school-room. The Usher entered at six (a.m., it should be remembered)and, kneeling at the upper end of the room, said prayers. While he was engaged in teaching the lower forms, one of the præpostors made a list of those who were late for prayers, while the Prapostor immundorum had to examine the faces and hands of his schoolfellows, in order to report to the Master, at seven a.m., any who had appeared dirty. Work was then carried on until after nine, when the boys were doubtless quite ready for their breakfast, and at ten o'clock one of the præpostors shouted 'Ad preces consurgite, to recall the boys to school, where, standing in order on each side of the room they recited further prayers. Dinner was at eleven, school again from noon till three, playtime ended at four, and after another hour of lessons the boys left school, apparently for supper; more lessons between six and eight; at seven a slice of bread and a draught of beer, and at eight o'clock those weary children went to bed chanting prayers. On Friday, being a fast-day, all the offences committed during the week were enumerated and the culprits No mention whatever is made of Sunday. in the morning in order to receive religious instruction before beginning the ordinary lessons of the day. After dinner on All Souls' day they repeated prayers for the dead, read aloud mournful passages selected by the master, and wrote verses about the glory of the resurrection, the blessedness of souls, and the hope of immortality! Such was the life of an Eton boy three-and-a-half centuries ago. How different from his school days in this year of grace 1908!*

To make mention of all the various changes educational, administrative, and social—that have taken place at Eton College during its wonderful history, would be beyond the scope of this article. Reference will be made to some of these changes in due course. In the meantime it should be stated that the original statutes were repealed in 1872, and that since then the educational system has been much modernized, though classics still retain their pre-eminence.

Despite those inevitable numerical fluctuations which take place in schools, Eton has steadily increased in public favour, so much so that it occupies the premier position among the public schools of England. At the present time, including the seventy Collegers—those on the Foundation its muster-roll numbers 1,036 boys. Among many distinguished alumni one easily recalls the names, in literature, for instance, of Fielding, Hallam, Kinglake, Arthur Christopher Benson, and the poets Gray and Shelley; in music, Thomas Augustine Arne—the school lists in which his name should appear are missing; Thomas Morell, Handel's librettist; Joah Bates, the conductor of the earliest Handel Festivals, held in Westminster Abbey, and, in our own day, Charles Hubert Hastings Parry; to these may be added, A. the outstanding, as well as the oldest part of the College. Its spacious interior (see the illustration below) at once attracts attention by reason of its noble proportions—150 feet long by 46 feet broad—in which strength is blended with beauty. And yet Henry VI. had a design for building a nave 168 feet long! This gave place to the antechapel which was probably finished in 1480, about twenty-two years after the choir had been completed. The ante-chapel contains many memorial brasses to distinguished Etonians and former officers of Dent, the historian of Alessandro Scarlatti and a the College, including one to Sir Joseph Barnby. critical musician; and Roger Quilter, whose lyrical Lupton's Chapel, on the north side of the main compositions are deservedly popular. In the church and in the senate, at the bar and in the army, in the civil service, and in every branch of national life, her sons have held their own and left their mark. At Eton have been learned the early lessons of endurance, patience, self-control, and sturdy independence, which have braced the characters of many of England's greatest men.'

the buildings of Eton College are attractive in the College Library adjoining it, the 'lodgings' their picturesque variety. The stately Chapel is of the Provost, Vice-Provost, Head Master and many drawbacks and many deficiencies,' says Sir from 1504 to 1535, where may be noticed his rebus, the letters L U P on a tun. The thirty-five stalls on each side of the Chapel-or, to be more accurate, the Collegiate Church—unfortunately hide some highly-interesting Italian frescoes which date from between 1479 and 1488. In the turret at the south-western angle of the ante-chapel is the service bell on which is inscribed 'Prayes ye the Lord. 1637.

To any one interested in old books a visit to the College Library is made additionally enjoyable and instructive with the Vice-Provost and Librarian (Mr. F. Warre Cornish) as a cicerone. Among the printed books he will find three Caxtons— 'Les fais et proesses du noble et vaillant chevalier Jason' (1474), 'Tully of Old Age,' &c. 'Merchant of Venice' (1600), &c. The first editions include Homer's Iliad (Florence, 1488) and Milton's 'Paradise Lost' (1667). Here is the first book printed with movable metal types, the so-called Mazarine Bible, in Latin (2 vols. folio), printed by Gutenberg and Fust (or Fust and Schöffer) at Mainz, 1453-56, just about the same time that Henry's foundation at Eton was getting into working order. The binding of oak boards, with stamped leather, is of the same date and by Johannes Fogel, of Bamberg. The Audit Books of 1609 show that the sum of £10 3s. $11\frac{1}{2}d$ was spent on the library, an amount which included payments to Joyce, the waterman, and sums for wharfage and custom, the books being conveyed from London by river.

of the clerk of the works for the Chapel; Charters, &c., with the Great Seals of William II., John, Henry III., Edward I., and others. There are some fine specimens of bindings, principally Italian and French, of the 16th and early 17th centuries, in addition to some Papal Bulls, and a very fine collection of mezzotint engravings from portraits by Sir Joshua Reynolds, though the margins of many are unfortunately cut.

The treasures include a Book of Hours, on vellum and illuminated (Paris, 1530), which belonged to Queen Mary Tudor, and afterwards to Mary of Modena, queen of James II. Of supreme vellum between the years 1500 and 1510, this precious tome, measuring 231 in. by 17-in., is in the original boards, covered with stamped leather with Tudor badges. The volume has been thoroughly examined by Mr. W. Barclay Squire, F.S.A., who communicated its contents to the Society of Antiquaries in a learned and exhaustive paper 'On an early sixteenth century MS. of English Music in the Library of Eton College,' which he read on February 17, 1898, and which is printed in Archaelogia, vol. lvi., p. 89. Mr. Squire says what makes the volume so valuable is that the compositions contained therein are without exception by men of high reputation in their day. 'So rare have collections of this sort become,' he adds, 'that I believe I am right in saying that there are now in England only two other MSS. of the kind which, for size and importance of their contents, can at all compare with the Eton volume; these are respectively preserved in the libraries of Lambeth Palace, and of Caius College, Cambridge, both dating from a little later than the Eton book.

The volume consists of a collection of motets and magnificats for several voices, the music of each part being so written upon opposite pages that, when the book is open, the different parts can be sung by all the singers at the same time, the earliest method of writing part-music. At the beginning of each composition is given, in red, its compass, from the lowest bass note to the highest in the treble, a detail which Mr. Squire has never seen in any other musical manuscript. A Salve Regina, in nine parts, by Robert Wilkinson, is curious as being written in white breves and semibreves, all the rest of the book being in black or red notes of this value.

This Anthem Book originally contained ninetyseven compositions. The pieces that are missing unfortunately include a 'Gaude flore virginali' (à 5) composed by John Dunstable, and a large part of a setting of the Passion for Palm Sunday (à 4) by Richard Davy. The forty-three perfect compositions that remain can be placed to the credit of the following musicians:

Banester.	Hacumplaynt.	Lambe.
Browne.	Hampton.	Sturton.
Cornysch.	Horwud.	Sutton.
Davy.	Huchyn.	Turges.
Fawkyner.	Hygons.	Wylkynson.
Favrfax.	Kellvk.

Not the least interesting feature of the MS. is the series of heraldic shields scattered throughout its pages. As specimens thereof we are enabled, by the kind permission of the Vice-Provost, to reproduce in facsimile as one of the special supplements to the present issue two folios from the volume. One of these facsimiles (fol. 64b) shows three of the five shields of a five-part motet, 'O domine celi terreque creator,' by Richard Davy, organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, at the end of the 15th century. The arms are as follows: Triplex, interest to musicians, however, is the splendid England; Tenor, Edward I. Confessor; Contra-Anthem Book (MS.) of Eton College. The last-named is one of the already described. The earliest mention of an organ is in connection with a visit of Queen Elizabeth to Eton in 1560 or 1561, when 'A Te Deum was sung in pricksong, all standing in their copes, and the organs playing. This instrument—called 'organs' because of its double row of keys or pipes-probably stood on the rood-screen. It was doubtless demolished at the Commonwealth, and the Chapel must have been left without an organ until the year 1700 or 1701, when Father Smith supplied a specimen of his artistic handicraft, erected on 'a huge organ-loft, about twenty-five feet in depth, approached by a flight of steps, placed across the Church within the choir.' This lost or screen, a very fine piece of work with fluted columns and elaborate carving by Grinling Gibbons—was disposed of at a small cost, another instance of the unfortunate 'getting rid' of organ cases and organ screens which prevailed in the early part of the last century, and even later. About the year 1830 John Gray is said to have erected a new organ. This was replaced by an instrument built by Messrs. Gray & Davison and placed half-way up the choir on the south side, standing on the floor of the Chapel. Although built as late as 1852, this was a G organ!

south side of the Chapel and greatly enlarged. the same time it was placed at the junction of the choir and ante-chapel, where it remained until 1881. In that year both the organ and the loft were taken down and the present stone screen, designed by Street, was erected and completed in 1882. To Messrs. W. Hill & Son were entrusted the reconstruction and enlargement of the organ, which was opened on June 4, 1885, by Mr. (afterwards Sir) Joseph Barnby, then Precentor and organist, when Handel's Chandos Te Deum was performed. The present organ—rebuilt by Messrs. Hill in 1902—consists of four manuals and fifty sounding stops: it is remarkable as being the only church instrument in the kingdom which exhibits front pipes of 32-feet scale.*

The close connection, from the ecclesiasticalmusical point of view, between Eton and Windsor is shown by the roll of organists beginning with John Mundy (c. 1575) and ending with John Mitchell, a lay-clerk of Windsor, in 1867. One of the Eton organists, John Lamb (c. 1687), was also a verger of St. George's Chapel! The new regime began in 1868 with the appointment of the Rev. George Leighton Hayne, Mus. Doc., an as organist. To him succeeded Dr. Charles Donald Maclean (1872-75), and for the next seventeen years the office was held with distinction by Sir Joseph Barnby. At his death, in 1892, a worthy successor was found in Dr. Charles Harford Lloyd.†

In considering the subject of music as part of the curriculum of the school life at Eton, it has to be stated that until forty years ago music had no existence there. In 1756 it was contrary to the rules for any boy on the Foundation to use any musical instruments. Joah Bates, then a Colleger, 'remained in this state of musical privation for some months, and had no other means of practising than by playing imaginary keys on the table, which for a considerable time was his custom every day.' Mr. George Graham-nicknamed 'Gronkey Graham'—one of the assistant-masters, possessed a harpsichord, probably a rare possession for an Eton With great kindness tutor in those days. Mr. Graham invited Joah to his rooms, 'and finding what an extraordinary performer he was, obtained permission for him to pursue his musical studies, accommodated him with the use of his instrument, and procured him liberty to play on the College organ at his leisure hours.' This incident, which throws an interesting light on the former neglect of music at Eton, serves to show how much may result from the sympathy and co-operation of an assistant master in fostering a boy's musical talent. Sir Hubert Parry, during his pupilage at the great school, picked up his music as best he could, taking a few lessons from Elvey, at Windsor, in playtime.

^{*} A view of the present organ will be found in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1899, p. 371.

Then, as already stated, Barnby entered upon his long and successful reign of seventeen years. The present holder of the office -his official title being 'Precentor and Musical Instructor'—is Dr. Charles Harford Lloyd, of whom a biographical sketch appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1899. Dr. Lloyd has an efficient staff of seven assistants:

Mr. Gustav Morsch, Cologne Conservatorium. Pianoforte

Mr. H. R. Couldrey, Organist of Holy Trinity Church, Windsor. Pianoforte, organ and singing.

Mr. Albert Mellor, Organist of Windsor Parish Church. Pianoforte and organ.

Mr. Mark Clapshaw. Pianoforte and singing.

Mr. Colin C. Taylor (Royal College of Music), Organist of Lower Chapel. Pianoforte and organ.

Mr. A. E. Baker, Mus. B. Oxon, Organist of Eton Parish Church. Pianoforte and organ.

Excluding the members of the Volunteer Band, nearly 150 boys now learn music, the majority studying instruments; there is also a harmony class conducted by Mr. Baker. These boys receive two half-hour lessons a week. Every pupil enters the time he has practised in a 'Music practice register,' an idea which Dr. Lloyd borrowed from Clifton College. This printed form, covering an entire 'Half,' as the school term is designated at Eton, is thus arranged:

that boys are now allowed to take their lessons during school hours, a hitherto unknown concession which is highly appreciated by both masters and pupils.

The Eton College Musical Society, as at present constituted, dates from the year 1875, and is in a flourishing condition. It consists of orchestra and choir, and is managed by a committee of masters and boys. Practices are held weekly, conducted by Dr. Lloyd, who is also president, in the large music-room, formerly a racquet court, in which there is a grand pianoforte and a two-manual M.A., Mus. In listening to a rehearsal of Sir Hubert Parry's new ode and Dr. Lloyd's stirring march, both composed for the opening of the new Memorial Buildings, one is struck by the keenness of the wishes. All, including the masters who belong to the Society, seem to enjoy this music-making, whether as vocalists or as instrumentalists, especially the youthful performer on the drums. At the present moment the boys belonging to the Society number 213, a record muster.

No more fitting conclusion to this brief sketch of Eton College—one that has music for its chief theme—could be found than that kindly and specially supplied by the Head Master, the Hon. and Rev. Edward Lyttelton, who writes as follows:

'It is difficult not to believe that Music has a great future in education in this country. Since the destruction of the Song Schools in the reign of Edward VI. it has been miserably neglected, but in spite of the neglect there is a vast amount of musical taste and capacity in the people, and wherever it is wisely trained surprisingly good results follow. In education it has at least three aspects, (1) it is a wholesome outlet for the emotions; (2) it is a constant and certain mode of training the brain; (3) all chorus and orchestral work is an admirable training in social co-operation. Further, it may be remarked that of all subjects now taught in schools, it is the one in which improvement can be most visibly manifested, and this is a feature sadly missed in some other subjects of teaching.'

MILTON AND MUSIC: A TERCENTENARY TRIBUTE.

JOHN MILTON: BORN, DECEMBER 9, 1608.

Music was the atmosphere which the infant John Milton breathed when he entered the world three hundred years ago. His father, John Milton the elder, was a skilled musician, one of those cultured amateurs through whose influence the divine art has contributed and still contributes to deepen the joys and soften the sorrows of home-life.

A scrivener by business or profession, music-loving John Milton, senr., like other city men of his day, lived over his 'shop' at the sign of the 'Spread Eagle,' Bread Street, Cheapside. In that quiet thoroughfare—for huge warehouses were then unknown—and under the shadow of the old Bow Church, his illustrious son was born, though the three lines: actual habitation in which he first saw the light was one of the 13,000 houses which fed the flames of the Great Fire of London. The musical interests, practical and creative, of Father Milton were recorded in the biographical sketch of him which appeared in the issue of this journal for July last (p. 437), therefore we may at once proceed to consider the subject of the relationship between his poet-son and the art which permeated the home of his childhood.

Professor Masson, in his monumental Life of the boys in endeavouring to carry out Dr. Lloyd's poet, says: 'The boy became a singer almost as soon as he could speak. We see him going to the organ for his own amusement, picking out little melodies by the ear, and stretching his tiny fingers in search of pleasing chords. Aubrey definitely that Milton's father taught him music and made him an accomplished organist.' performers, however gifted they may be, pass away and, like a dream, they are forgotten. Not so the written word. Stamped with genius, it remains, and the printing-press sets its seal upon 'immortal verse.'

> In the youthful poetic flights of Milton—versifications of Psalms cxiv. and cxxxvi.-music does not find a place as it does in his later and maturer works. Attention may, however, be called to the latter of the above paraphrases, because it is sung in all the churches. Will not the first stanza readily recall that hymn of praise?

> > Let us with a gladsome mind Praise the Lord for He is kind; For His mercies aye endure, Ever faithful, ever sure.

The entire hymn, which consists of twenty-four stanzas, is a fine piece of work for a boy aged Here are a few stanzas that have not found their way into the church-song of the people:

> The ruddy waves He cleft in twain Of the Erythræan main, For His, &c.

In bloody battle He brought down Kings of prowess and renown, For His, &c.

He foiled both Seon and his host That ruled the Amorrean coast; For His, &c.

And large-limbed Og he did subdue With all his over-hardy crew, For His, &c.

The hymn which forms part of 'On the morning of Christ's nativity'-written at the age of twenty-one, when Milton was an undergraduate at Christ's College, Cambridge—contains more than one reference to music, e.g. stanza IX.:

> When such music sweet Their hearts and ears did greet As never was by mortal finger strook, Divinely-warbled voice Answering the stringed noise, As all their souls in blissful rapture took:

And how fine is stanza XIII., especially the last

Ring out, ye crystal spheres! Once bless our human ears, If ye have power to touch our senses so; And let your silver chime Move in melodious time; And let the bass of heaven's deep organ blow; And with your ninefold harmony Make up full consort to the angelic symphony.

A year later he wrote 'At a solemn music' (Blest pair of Sirens), reference to which may for the moment be deferred. One of Milton's intimate friends was Henry Lawes, thirteen years his senior and one of the great musicians of the It was Lawes who is supposed to have suggested to his poet-friend the writing of the Masque of 'Comus,' produced at Ludlow castle 'on Michaelmasse night,' 1634. Lawes not only composed music for the representation, but himself took the part of the Attendant Spirit on that occasion. In 'Comus' we have the line:

And filled the air with barbarous dissonance also

I was all ear, And took in strains that might create a soul Under the ribs of Death.

The most interesting reference to music in this Masque does not, however, appear in the published versions. It occurred in the song 'Sweet Echo,' of which lines 13 and 14 originally read:

So may'st thou be translated to the skies, And hold a counterpoint to all Heaven's harmonies.

The original autograph at Trinity College, Cambridge, shows that Milton wrote this couplet Again, later on: with his own hand: it was his own idea. But probably thinking the 'counterpoint' reference would be too technical, he changed the line to:

And give resounding grace to all Heaven's harmonies.

That Milton held Henry Lawes in the highest regard is proved by the Sonnet he wrote for his friend; here it is, the lines being prompted by 'Choice Psalms put into Musick for Three Voices. . . . Composed by Henry and William Lawes' (1648), and prefixed to that publication:

TO MR. H. LAWES ON HIS AIRS. Harry, whose tuneful and well-measur'd song First taught our English music how to span Words with just note and accent, not to scan With Midas' ears, committing short and long; Thy worth and skill exempts thee from the throng, With praise enough for Envy to look wan; To after age thou shalt be writ the man, That with smooth air could'st humour best our tongue. Thou honour'st Verse, and Verse must send her wing To honour thee, the priest of Phœbus' quire, That tun'st their happiest lines in hymn or story. Dante shall give Fame leave to set thee higher Than his Casella, whom he woo'd to sing,

The twin-poems of Milton's early manhood, 'L'Allegro' and 'Il Penseroso,' furnish apt quotation, e.g.:

Lap me in soft Lydian airs,

Met in the milder shades of Purgatory.

In notes with many a winding bout Of linkèd sweetness long drawn out With wanton heed and giddy cunning, The melting voice through mazes running, Untwisting all the chains that tie The hidden soul of harmony.

Perhaps some apology might be needed for the next extract (from 'Il Penseroso'), because it is so often quoted, were it not that we may venture on the surmise that this splendid apostrophe of the organ and English church music was inspired by the services which Milton heard in old St. Paul's Cathedral or (say) King's College, Cambridge:

> There let the pealing organ blow, To the full-voiced quire below, In service high and anthems clear, As may with sweetness, through mine ear, Dissolve me into ecstasies, And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.

Rich indeed is the musical mine of the poet's wonderful epic 'Paradise Lost,' written in the full maturity of his great genius. A few samples from the twelve books will suffice to show to what extent Milton was indebted to music for his imagery, whether in the depths below or in the heavens above. In Book I. he says:

> Anon they move In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood Of flutes and soft recorders.

As in an organ, from one blast of wind, To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes. Anon out of the earth a fabric huge Rose like an exhalation, with the sound Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet.

The scene changes (Book III.) when:

The multitude of Angels, with a shout Loud as from numbers without number, sweet As from blest voices, uttering joy—Heaven rung With jubilee, and loud hosannas filled The eternal regions.

their golden harps they took-Harps ever tuned, that glittering by their side Like quivers hung; and with preamble sweet Of charming symphony they introduce Their sacred song, and waken raptures high: No voice exempt, no voice but well could join Melodious part; such concord is in Heaven.

Equally thrilling in its splendid diction are these lines, forming part of the Creation episode (Book VII.):

Up he rode,

Followed with acclamation, and the sound Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tuned Angelic harmonies.

the solemn pipe And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop, All sounds on fret by string or golden wire, Tempered soft tunings, intermixed with voice Choral or unison.

So sung they, and the Empyrean rung With halleluiahs.

And then the description of fugue Book XI.:

> whence the sound Of instruments that made melodious chime Was heard, of harp and organ, and who moved Their stops and chords was seen: his volant touch Instinct through all proportions low and high Fled and pursued transverse the resonant fugue.

While no attempt has been made to exhaust the references to music in the poetic works, we may now turn to Milton's prose writings, wherein will be found some interesting evidences of the poet's indebtedness to the art so dearly loved by his father. Our first quotation is from 'Areopagitica: a speech for the liberty of unlicensed printing,' published in 1644. Milton says:

If we think to regulate printing, thereby to rectify manners, we must regulate all recreations and pastimes, all that is delightful to man. No music must be heard, no song be set or sung, but what is grave and doric. There must be no licensing dancers, that no gesture, motion, or deportment be taught our youth, but what by their allowance shall be thought honest; for such Plato was provided of. It will ask more than the work of twenty licensers to examine all the lutes, the violins, and the guitars in every house; they must not be suffered to prattle as they do, but must be licensed what they may say. And who shall silence all the airs and madrigals that whisper softness in chambers? . . . The villages also must have their visitors to inquire what lectures the bagpipe and the rebec reads, even to the ballatry and the gamut of every municipal fiddler; for these are the countryman's Arcadias, and his Monte Mayors.

The following extract from the famous letter 'On education, written by Milton to his friend 'Master Samuel Hartlib,' needs no comment:

The interim of . . . convenient rest before meat, may, both with profit and delight, be taken up in recreating and composing their travailed spirits with the solemn and divine harmonies of music, heard or learned; either whilst the skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony with artful and unimaginable touches adorn and grace the well-studied chords of some choice composer; sometimes the lute or soft organ-stop waiting on elegant voices, either to religious, martial, or civil ditties; which, if wise men and prophets be not extremely out, have a great power over dispositions and manners, to smooth and make them gentle from rustic harshness and distempered passions. The like also would not be inexpedient after meat, to assist and cherish nature in her first concoction, and send their minds back to study in good tune and satisfaction.

As showing that Milton took more than a poetic interest in music, it should be recalled that during his visit to Italy, in 1638 (etat twenty-nine), he collected the compositions of Antonio Cifra, of which he was very fond, and sent home 'a chest or two of choice music books' (Phillip's 'Memoir'). What has become of them? Before we leave this part of our 'tribute,' mention is due of the fact that the poet formed the subject of an opera (entitled | 1895. 'Milton') composed by Spontini, the libretto by oratorio 'Samson,' and, as Professor Masson says, Etienne Jouy, and successfully produced at the 'Handel married his great music to Milton's as Opera Comique, Paris, on November 27, 1804. great words.

It may not be without interest to give the dramatis personæ of Spontini's opera, a full-score of which is contained in the library of the British Museum:

Secondly: the poems that have been set to music. To composers of various nationalities 'Paradise Lost' has offered great attractions. As far back as the year 1728 the Hymn of Adam and Eve (Book V.) was composed by John Ernest Galliard, to which Dr. Benjamin Cooke added an 'overture, accompaniments, and choruses.' (The MSS. of the latter are in the Library of the Royal College of Music.) It is interesting to find in the list of subscribers to Galliard's publication 'Mr. Handel,' and, moreover, that he generously subscribed for 'Four books'! A year later (1729) Philip Hart set the same words, and J. F. Reichardt in 1835, his best work, in a translation by Herder entitled 'Milton's Morgengesang.' Although never courted Milton's great epic for the exercise of his muse, his secretary and amanuensis, John Christopher Smith there found material for an oratorio entitled 'Paradise Lost,' produced during the lifetime of his master, Handel. Pio Cianchettini composed a cantata, 'Paradise Lost,' and in 1817 M. P. King wrote one entitled Intercession,' in which occurred the song 'Eve's lamentation,' which had a remarkable run of popularity. In a cantata entitled 'The seventh day,' Sir Henry Bishop (in 1834), Dr. Henry Wylde (1853), and John Lodge Ellerton (1857), all drew their inspiration from 'Paradise Lost.' The foreign composers of recent times who have been attracted by the same poem are Rubinstein (performed at the Philharmonic Concert of June 9, 1882), Théodore Dubois ('Le Paradis perdu,' Paris, 1878), and Enrico Bossi ('Il Paradiso perduto), produced at Augsburg, December 6, 1903.

'Comus' had the advantage of its songs being beautifully set by Henry Lawes and sung at the first performance in 1634. Dr. Arne and Charles Edward Horsley respectively composed music to the Masque. That 'L'Allegro' and 'Il Penseroso' inspired Handel with some of his most stirring strains is too well-known to need further comment. The same twin-poem attracted the muse of Sir Hubert Parry in the cantata he composed for the Norwich Musical Festival of 1890, and it forms the basis of Sir Charles Stanford's fifth Symphony (in D, Op. 56), dedicated to the Philharmonic Society and produced at their concert of March 20, 'Samson Agonistes' is associated with the

Lastly; we come to one of Milton's finest achievements, a poem, written, it is supposed, when he was twenty-one years of age. It is very short, but what a wealth of imagery in music is contained in those twenty-eight lines! The poem must be given in full:

AT A SOLEMN MUSICK.

Blest pair of Sirens, pledges of heav'n's joy, Sphere-born harmonious sisters, Voice and Verse, Wed your divine sounds, and mixed pow'r employ, Dead things with inbreathed sense able to pierce; And to our high-raised phantasy present That undisturbed song of pure concent, Aye sung before the sapphire-coloured throne To Him that sits thereon, With saintly shout, and solemn jubilee, Where the bright Seraphim in burning row Their loud uplifted angel-trumpets blow, And the cherubic host in thousand quires Touch their immortal harps of golden wires, With those just Spirits that wear victorious palms, Hymns devout and holy psalms Singing everlastingly: That we on earth with undiscording voice May rightly answer that melodious noise; As once we did, till disproportioned sin Jarred against nature's chime, and with harsh din Broke the fair music that all creatures made To their great Lord, whose love their motion swayed In perfect diapason, whilst they stood In first obedience, and their state of good. O may we soon again renew that song, And keep in tune with Heav'n, till God ere long To His celestial concert us unite, To live with Him, and sing in endless morn of light.

The autograph of 'At a Solemn Musick' is one of the treasures in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge. A perusal of this precious possession is not only interesting, but lends support to the saying that 'genius is the capacity for taking pains.' At first Milton headed the poem with the simple title 'Song,' the designation 'At a Solemn Musick' being an afterthought. The 'trumpet' line—so familiar in Handel's strident setting—reached its perfection by slow degrees thus (we give Milton's spelling):

thire loud * trumpets blow, thire loud symphonie of silver trumpets blow, thire high lifted, loud, arch-angell trumpets blow, thire loud uplifted angel-trumpets blow.

The last line evidently gave him more trouble:

To live with Him, and sing in ever-endless light.
in ever-glorious light.
in uneclipsed light.
where day dwells without night.
in endlesse morne of light.
in cloudlesse birth of light.
in never-parting light.

From these seven alternatives the poet ultimately selected the fifth, and who would question the wisdom of his choice?

In close proximity to the Milton treasure is the autograph score of Sir Hubert Parry's setting of the words, presented by the composer to the library of Trinity College. On the last page is written:

Finished, Jan. 7, 1887. Written at Wilton and in London. C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

We learn from the composer that his setting of 'Blest pair of Sirens' came into existence in connection with the Jubilee of Queen Victoria in 1887. At their concert in that year, the Bach Choir proposed to perform Sir Hubert Parry's 'The glories of our blood and state,' but as the words were considered to be rather inappropriate to that joyous time in the nation's history, he was asked to set Milton's noble poem to music. 'Dedicated to C. V. Stanford and the Members of the Bach Choir,' the work-for chorus and orchestra-was first performed by the Bach Choir at St. James's Hall, Regent Street, on Tuesday, May 17, 1887. How many times it has been repeated, and always with success, it would be difficult to estimate. Who could listen to this strain, for instance, without being thrilled by its melodic ecstasy?

Surely this is immortal music blended with 'immortal verse.'

Sir Alexander Mackenzie has been elected General President of the International Musical Society for the next two years. During the first five years of the Society's existence (1899-1904), the original founder, Prof. Oskar Fleischer, of Berlin, was President. For the next four years Prof. Hermann Kretzschmar, of On the present occasion the Berlin, held that office. election has, for the first time, taken place through the post, eighteen different countries taking part therein. Sir Alexander Mackenzie received ten votes out of fifteen. Certain votes were delivered late, otherwise the figures in his favour would have been thirteen out of eighteen. Bearing in mind its cosmopolitan nature, the result of the voting is a very remarkable and significant tribute to British music through one of its most distinguished representatives. The Society will hold its third Congress at Vienna at the end of May, 1909, concurrently with the centenary celebration of the death of Haydn, which took place on May 31, 1809.

SIR EDWARD ELGAR'S SYMPHONY.

Few musical works of late years have been awaited so eagerly as this symphony. In the first place its coming has been delayed—it is four years since it was promised for the Elgar festival held at Covent Garden in 1904—so that expectation has had plenty of time to grow, and rumours of its programme and its contents have been passed from mouth to mouth. But the interest felt has been something better than the curiosity which gossips about the work of a famous man. The symphony remains the most comprehensive form of pure instrumental music. Its composition demands the highest concentration of forces, a power of sustaining and developing musical ideas through extended movements, and of holding the interest of hearers with a stronger grasp than by the attractive qualities of picturesque description. It is small wonder that Elgar's admirers should have been anxious to see him employ his unique gift of orchestral command upon a symphony. The problem of how far the symphonic form can be moulded to meet the individual requirements of a modern composer has been shelved of late, when so many composers have occupied themselves instead with the tonepoem, a form which is entirely pliable to the particular programme chosen for illustration. Must the symphony be regarded as too rigid a structure to admit the free play of modern ideas, or can it be satisfactorily used for the illustration of a programme, as Tchaikovsky used it? Or, further, is there something new to be said in music which admits no translation into words, and can the symphony more fitly express that? Many have felt that a symphony by Elgar must help to answer such questions, or at least give important data to those who are concerned with them.

Now that the symphony is before us, the first fact that strikes us is its likeness to the classical model. It is in four movements:

- 1. Andante nobilmente e semplice-Allegro.
- 2. Allegro molto.
- 3. Adagio.
- 4. Lento-Allegro.

The first is substantially in what is known as 'first movement' form, with certain important modifications which we shall note later; the second is practically a Scherzo in all but name; the third is a serene slow movement in a binary form without development, and with an important Coda; while the fourth, after a slow introduction, breaks into a swinging theme, the principal one of a rondo movement. So far all is orderly and even conventional in pattern, but closer study reveals indications that the formal scheme is subservient to a deeper The composer has denied that the and conquest, and especially the contrast between the ideal and the actual in life. If, in a sense, it is the composer's private diary, it is written in a cypher to which every hearer possesses a key in his own experience. All who are susceptible to the language of sound will feel the uplifting power of the first theme, unfolded at length in the introduction:

It clearly represents the heroic attitude of mind and heart in its stately rhythm, and its unswerving advance to a majestic climax of sound. chromatic discord mars its outline; the whole is broadly diatonic in the key of A flat major. When the melody has been twice presented, the second time with the fullest power of the orchestra and richly harmonized — a typical harmonic progression wrenches the mind away from the exalted picture, and introduces a restless, searching theme in D minor, the principal one of the Allegro:

We see the most important modification of form alluded to above in this contrast between the remote keys of A flat major and D minor. Though the composer has made no avowal of his purpose, it is not perhaps too fanciful to connect the one with the inward life of thought and aspiration, the other with the outward struggle v the world of action. At any rate, this strenuous theme is developed in a way that suggests the battle of existence until, with a change of signature (from 2 to 6) the composer passes to the considerasymphony illustrates any particular story or phase tion of a number of secondary themes, each of of life; its purpose, however, is greater than can be which has a poetic beauty of its own, and which contained in a programme of words. It is written out of a full life-experience, and is meant to include This is a suave, extended melody in the strings, the innumerable phases of joy and sorrow, struggle whose meditative character is enhanced by the softly falling sixths which stand as accompaniment. It is succeeded by a development of the first theme, opening into a leaping arpeggio figure marked Giusto, and the softer emotions of the second them: give way to a virile treatment of the subject-matter, until it is arrested by a reminiscence of the idealistic theme of the introduction, suggesting that the heroic mood is involved in these turbulent surroundings. This begins the actual development section, in which the diverse elements are expanded and contrasted at length. To them is added a new theme, an arpeggio figure of uncertain tonality and sinister import:

which is worked through a long sequence, till the principal theme struggles with it and finally The first theme returns in its conquers it. completeness and in its original key, D minor, but here again the contrast of the two principal keys (A flat major and D minor) is taken into account, and a sudden transposition places the bulk of the recapitulation in the key of A flat. This allows the heroic theme (No. 1) to return in its original key, and to blend with the matter of the Allegro as though it would gradually subdue the world forces to consonance with the ideal. It is heard in the Coda in simple duple time against various rhythms of the other themes. Amongst them the rhythm is prominent, and the evil sounding arpeggio (No. 4) is heard. In the end they give way before the sublime attitude of the heroic theme, and the movement ends with a peaceful pianissimo.

The key of the Scherzo lies only two steps away, as it were, on the subdominant side. Yet, as F sharp minor, it looks and feels remote enough to detach it from all previous matter, and the whirling semiquaver passage on which it is built introduces an entirely new aspect of things:

One of the fugitive transitional passages in which the symphony abounds here follows, built on this characteristic chord progression:

movement is in B flat major and, like the Scherzo, has two principal subjects. The first is a charming flute duet on a B flat pedal, a kind of Musette. The second is less notable, but it achieves success when later on it is deftly combined with the principal subject. The climax of this movement is reached in the ultimate return of the two scherzo subjects combined. If the whole be taken as a picture of the exuberance of youth, then the gradual ebb of energy from the principal theme (No. 5) in the Coda has a special significance. From its semiquaver form it passes to triplet quavers, thence to plain quavers and finally to crotchets, and dies down till life becomes almost When, however, it is only maintained by a single thread of sound, the theme reappears completely transfigured into a rich cantabile melody, the opening of the Adagio. Nothing in the whole symphony is more remarkable than the transformation of this theme. The actual notes are the same as those of the Scherzo, but its rhythm and key and mood are all entirely new:

It is extended into a movement of great beauty, in which the composer seems to have embodied his deepest thoughts and feelings. There is a high seriousness in the way the themes are unfolded, relieved by touches of human sympathy in the more chromatic episodes which link them together, and finally the movement is summed up by an inspired melody in which, as will be seen, the interval of the rising seventh is prominent:

It has no thematic connection with either of the melodies on which the movement is built, yet it seems to be the complement of them both, and and soon a reckless almost barbaric second subject after it the pianissimo ending comes as a complete

The two middle movements have carried the hearer far from the main problem of the symphony, and a Lento introduction to the Finale recalls us. In it the heroic theme (No. 1), and the tortuous arpeggio (No. 4) which strongly suggests some malign force, both find place, and with them are combined fragments from the themes of the Finale, especially from that quoted below as No. 11. The two chief keys (A flat major and D minor) are suggested, though the latter prevails. Out of reminiscence and foreboding the vigorous principal theme leaps to light. It is marked risoluto, and its character is typical of a concentrated and manly energy:

A striking harmonic progression quickly leads to a joyous, open-hearted second subject, smoother but not less energetic than the first:

Its first strain is turned to splendid account in the peroration of the symphony; it has wings, in the sense that many of Brahms's exuberant melodies have; it is, nevertheless, its composer's own utterance and full of warmth and a feeling of good-fellowship. After an ascending passage in the style of No. 9, this broad, diatonic phrase makes its appearance, and from a soft entry in ages past,' to the time-honoured tune 'St. Anne's' marches through a striking sequence of keys to by Dr. Croft, scored for orchestra by Dr. Lloyd, in a great climax of tone. With these materials the which the unison verses were powerfully vociferated movement is elaborately developed until at last a reference to the heroic theme (No. 1) brings a more thoughtful treatment of the matter. whole mood changes, the physical energy is relaxed, and the violins play an augmented and cantabile form of No. 11, supported by flowing arpeggio figures in the key of E flat minor. marks the final turning away from D minor tonality, and the recapitulation is arrived at in the key of E flat, changing to A flat major at the point where No. 11 takes command and marches triumphantly forward to the climax. In the Coda the heroic theme prevails above all, not, as in the first movement, to subdue the activities of life, but to glorify and fulfil them; and so the ending leaves behind the transient energies of life, and its massive climax of sound points to a steadfast trust in the things that remain, especially in 'the greatest of these.'

If this description has been in any way to the purpose, it will have shown that, whatever there may be in principle or in detail which is open to debate, here is a work of lofty purpose and commanding power which is not likely to disappoint the high expectations it has aroused.

OPENING OF THE NEW MEMORIAL BUILDINGS, ETON COLLEGE.

Music held an honoured and prominent position at the opening by the King, on November 18, of the new Memorial Buildings, erected to commemorate those Etonians who lost their lives in the South African War. The ceremony took place in the stately School Hall, in which were assembled a distinguished company of visitors, together with the whole school, 1,000 boys, except the 'Territorial' guard of honour stationed outside. Dr. C. H. Lloyd, the Precentor and Musical Instructor, had provided an excellent programme, all the music, with one exception, being by English composers. An efficient professional orchestra was engaged who, previous to the arrival of the Royal party, played the following selection: 'Imperial March' (Elgar), the slow movement from the March' (Elgar), the slow movement from the 'L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso' symphony (Stanford), and the march from 'Athalie' (Mendelssohn). Seated behind and around the band were the members of the Eton College Musical Society, numbering 229 voices; the choir being constituted thus: Boys 213, Masters 14, Conducts (i.e. Chaplains) 2, to whom on this occasion were added Lay-Clerks 6, Choristers 16, making a grand total of 251 voices. The tenors and basses of grand total of 251 voices. The tenors and basses of the Society sang, to Greek words (poetry by Tyrtaeus), an Έμβατήριον 'Marching Song' for chorus and orchestra, composed by Mr. A. M. Goodhart, Mus. Bac., one of the classical assistant-masters, who conducted a capital performance of his vigorous music.

Upon the entry of the King, who was accompanied by the Queen, the National Anthem was sung by the whole school in unison, while the procession, headed by the Sixth Form boys—dressed in swallow-tail coats, knee breeches, and silk stockings, and walking with measured tread and slow—made its way to the dais at the end of the building. Then followed one of the most moving parts of the dedication ceremony, the singing of Dr. Watts's fine old hymn 'O God, our help in ages past,' to the time-honoured tune 'St. Anne's' by Dr. Croft, scored for orchestra by Dr. Lloyd, in which the unison verses were powerfully vociferated by the whole school with thrilling effect. The Bishop of Oxford then conducted a short devotional servicea Versicle, Response, the Lord's Prayer, and two Collects - which concluded with the Benediction, pronounced by the Bishop of Lincoln by virtue of his office as Visitor of the College.

'The Musical Society will then sing the "Memorial Ode," written by Mr. Robert Bridges and set to music by Sir Hubert Parry, Bart, C.V.O.' Thus ran the official programme. It was fitting that an old Etonian and one so distinguished as a creative musician should have been asked to compose the chief work on this inaugural occasion. The music, for chorus and orchestra only, is laid out on broad lines and is concise in treatment, the whole Ode occupying only ten minutes in performance. In the opening symphony Sir Hubert felicitously introduces the 'Eton Volunteer Call' (in the minor) and, a few bars later, the 'Assembly Call,' thus giving a touch of local colour to his melodious music. The interest of the work culminates in the third stanza of the poem:

Now henceforth their shrine is builded, high and vast, Alway drawing noble hearts to noble deeds,

In the toil of good to-be, and the tale of glory past:

While ever the laughing waves of youth pass over the meads.

And the tongue of Hellas is heard, and old Time slumbereth light

In the cradle of Peace. O let thy dancing feet Roam in our land and abide, dear Peace, thou child of Right, Giver of happiness gentle and sweet.

This begins with a fine, broad melody, which gives place to a bright little fugal passage to the words 'While ever the laughing waves of youth,' leading to another sprightly and tripping section of an 'imitative' nature, 'O let thy dancing feet roam in our land and abide.' The music assumes a devotional and impressive tone towards the end, a magnificent effect being obtained at this passage:

and the whole ending strenuously with a mighty shout, in the chord of F major, on the word 'Right.' Sir Hubert Parry conducted an excellent performance of his work, the members of the E.C.M.S. doing their best, thanks to the drilling they had received from Dr. Lloyd, to realize the intentions of the composer.

Addresses were then presented to his Majesty by the Provost and Fellows, and by the School. The latter, read in a distinct and well modulated voice by E. Matthews, K.S., Captain of the School, was as follows:

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTIES,-

We, present Etonians, beg to offer to your Majesties our sincere and humble thanks for your gracious kindness in being present to-day. Your Majesties' visit to Eton on this occasion will fix in the memories of the youngest of us a ceremony which must be to all Etonians of deep and lasting interest. To us who are still members of the school this group of buildings will serve as a memorial, not so much of friends whom we ourselves have lost, as of the gallant deeds of former Etonians in the hour of their country's need. We wish therefore to express on behalf of the boys, our deep sense of your Majesties' favour and of this fresh proof which you have afforded of interest in the welfare of the school.

Eton College, Nov. 18, 1908.

E. MATTHEWS, K.S., Captain of the School. E. R. MITCHISON, Captain of the Oppidans.

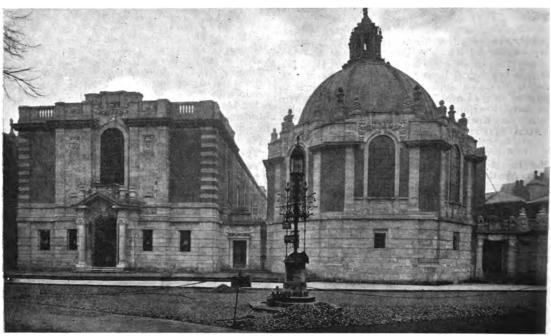

In graciously replying to this Address, the King, speaking in clear and earnest tones, said :

The Queen and I are most gratified by your loyal and dutiful address. We have always felt a special interest in successive generations of Etonians, and deep concern for their welfare while at school and for their success and credit in after-life. Of those whom I now see before me some will, I have no doubt, aim at high positions in the State and attain distinction equal to that of their most honoured predecessors. Others will serve their country with vigour and reputation in our Forces or in the professions of art and learning.

Your success and the repute which you enjoy in the mouths of men, and, what is still more important, in your own mind and conscience, depend upon the use which you make of the means which are now placed generously at your disposal for the cultivation of your minds and bodies, and the development of your character. Whatever may be your subsequent careers, you all have the opportunity of leaving Eton trained in the knowledge and accomplishments of English gentlemen, and disciplined to the self-restraint, the consideration for others, and the loyal acceptance of private and public duties which are the ideals of our race.

I exhort you to value and to make the most of that training and discipline. You can have no better example than that of the brave men of whom this splendid building is a loyal and lasting memorial. They sacrificed themselves with devotion for the great cause which we have all at heart, the cause of our country, and freely laid down their lives for her sake. In their lives and by their deaths they maintained the traditions which have made Eton renowned in our history. Those traditions are now in your keeping. Be worthy of them. I pray earnestly that the blessing of God may attend the career of every one of you.

After the speeches 'An Eton Memorial March'—the words by Mr. A. C. Ainger, a former assistant-master, the music by Dr. Lloyd, written and composed for the occasion—was performed with rousing effect. Dr. Lloyd has written a most melodious strain, which would make an excellent organ piece. While it contains, and naturally so, an element of a popular tune, its rhythmic flow is absolutely free from anything approaching meretriciousness, and this new marching song went with a swing that must have gratified its genial composer. Other schools might find Dr. Lloyd's 'Memorial March' useful by substituting another name for Eton.

Presentations to the King and Queen immediately followed, during which and at the departure of the Royal party from the Hall the orchestra played the two attractive pieces entitled 'Age and Youth,' composed by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer. Everything passed off without a hitch of any kind. Dr. Lloyd conducted with his characteristic energy and alertness, and the rendering of the music not only gave every satisfaction, but formed a pleasant feature of a great occasion.

In concluding this brief record of an interesting and memorable ceremony, a few words may be said on the Memorial Buildings, of which a photograph is given above. They stand in the main road on ground opposite Upper School, and have a frontage of 150 feet, gradually narrowing towards the back. The School Hall, which is the main building, is 142 × 53 feet in dimensions, and holds 1,100 persons in its seating capacity. Perfectly white from floor to ceiling, this spacious room is lofty and magnificent in its splendid proportions. It contains a bust of Queen Victoria, and there are panels of oak recording the names of the 129 Etonians who fell in the South African War.

The dome-crowned octagonal School Library, 54 × 37 feet, provides shelf-room for 25,000 books, and will accommodate from 50 to 60 readers. At the back of the Library is a Classical Museum, 52 × 20 feet, the whole pile being connected by a corridor on the right of the School Hall.

The architects are Messrs. L. K. Hall and S. K. Greenslade, of Victoria Street, Westminster, who may be heartily congratulated on the success of their design. The enriched ceilings of the School Hall and School Library are of cast fibrous plaster, modelled by Mr. Arthur Broadbent from designs by and under the personal supervision of the architects. To quote from an official statement: 'Both in the stone carving and in the plaster work an attempt has been made to revive the spirit of the work of Wren and Grinling Gibbons. The buildings generally are designed to be in the style of the English Renaissance of that period. Externally, Portland stone has been used in conjunction with a purple grey brick, very similar to that used by Wren in Queen's Square and elsewhere.'

that used by Wren in Queen's Square and elsewhere. The general contractors were Messrs. Henry Willcock & Co., of Wolverhampton, and their contract for the shell of the buildings amounted to £37,000; the contract will have been completed without this sum being exceeded. In addition, large sums have already been spent on fittings, &c.

Many generous gifts have been made, but a very great deal still remains to be done. One thing the School Hall seriously lacks is an organ. For this desirable acquisition Dr. Lloyd wants £3,000. Surely this is an amount which some wealthy Etonian would be only too glad to give, and thus permanently associate his name with the ancient foundation of 'The Kynge's College of our Ladye of Eton, beside Windsore.'

Occasional Motes.

The War Office has decreed that the National Anthem is henceforth to be played by military bands at a quicker rate of speed than formerly—crotchet = 84, as against crotchet = 60. This new tempo, however, is only for use as a 'salute,' with presented arms, and not for vocal purposes. As a matter of fact, the National Anthem is a prayer. Indeed, it is so regarded at the Royal Military School of Music, where it is sung kneeling. To quote from the illustrated article on Kneller Hall, which appeared in The MUSICAL TIMES of August, 1900:

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM SUNG AS A PRAYER.

But the most affecting moment in the whole service arrives after the third collect. Instead of the rustle usually heard at that break in Morning or Evening Prayer, the entire congregation remain kneeling, when in soft and reverent tones of pure vocal harmony, the strains of 'God save the Queen' unexpectedly fall upon the ear. At the words 'Send Her victorious,' there comes forth a great forte that is absolutely thrilling in the intensity of its utterance. 'Long to reign over us' is sung decrescendo, and the last phrase, 'God save the Queen,' is, like the first, rendered with all suppliant tenderness. Words fail to describe the scene and the effect of those simple yet familiar strains when sung as a prayer under the conditions of a service in the Chapel of Kneller Hall. This, however, may be said, the moving power of simplicity in music was again demonstrated.

No less important than the matter of speed is that of the pitch of the National Anthem, especially when it is sung by a miscellaneous concourse of people. On such occasions, be the assemblage large or small, the key selected should not be higher than that of G. At this pitch, and at a speed of MM. 56, the tune is invested with that prayerful attribute which the words demand.

The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society had the honour of giving 'by command' a choral concert at St. George's Hall, Windsor Castle, on November 16, in connection with the State visit to this country of the King and Queen of Sweden. In addition to the distinguished guests, the company included the King and Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and other members of the Royal Family. The following pieces were sung under the direction of the conductor of the Society, Mr. John James:

The Nati	ional A	Anthen	1.
Part-song, 'The parting kiss'					Pinsuti.
Part-song, 'The lullaby'					Elgar.

The first appearance of this excellent Society in London is noticed on p. 799.

It is always gratifying to report the progress of music in Britain beyond the seas. We learn from Sydney, that 'next year will witness a notable epoch in the musical history of Australia.' It is proposed to hold a festival there in May next, which will consist of 'a programme of concerts covering a whole week, commencing Monday and finishing on Saturday, besides a number of matinees.' The band is to consist of 100 performers, and a choir of 500 voices will be organized for the occasion. Further details of this interesting project will be awaited with interest.

Sir Frederick Bridge, King Edward Professor of Music, is delivering a course of five lectures at the University of London, South Kensington, on 'Composers of classical songs.' The first discourse was given on November 6, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven; and the remaining dates are December 4, Schubert; February 12, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Chopin; March 5, Liszt, Rubinstein, and Brahms; April 2, Robert Franz and contemporaries. Admission to the lectures, which are open to the public without fee, and are delivered at 5 p.m., is by ticket, for which application should be made to the Academic Registrar, University of London, South Kensington, S.W.

The Rev. William Boyd—the history of whose tune. 'Pentecost,' is given on p. 786—tells an amusing story of his friend Arthur Sullivan. 'One evening,' he says, 'I happened to call on Sullivan, then living with his mother in rooms at Claverton Terrace, Pimlico. A knock at the door, and who should enter but the Duke of Edinburgh. We three then made music together, the Duke with his violin (which he had brought with him), Sullivan at the pianoforte, and I at the harmonium. I remember we played, amongst other things, Gounod's "Berceuse"—it was quite new then—and Braga's "Serenata." Later on the Duke danced a hornpipe, while Arthur jiggled on the piano and I vamped on the wheezy old harmonium. We had pork chops and porter for supper, of which appetising meal His Royal Highness partook with evident enjoyment. At two o'clock in the morning we separated, having passed a very pleasant evening.'

Not much has been heard of The Musical League, the birth of which in the Spring of this year was chronicled so widely by the Press. The announced objects of the League were irreproachable as abstract propositions, even though for an infant society they seemed to many persons to show symptoms of megalomania. Obviously the League could not attempt to fulfil even a small part of its mission until it drew into its fold a strong body of members. On the other hand, it was difficult to induce even sympathisers to join while there was no definite scheme of practical work to bring forward. So there was the threat of a deadlock. But we are glad to hear that this situation has been relieved by the accession of new members, and by the creation of a substantial guarantee fund that has enabled the Committee to decide to hold a musical festival in Liverpool next Spring. In accordance with the objects of the League, the programme may include new compositions, both English and foreign, and older works of musical interest, which, under present conditions, are not heard as frequently as their merit deserves. Members of the League are entitled to send in works for consideration with a view to performance. It is hoped that this view to performance. realization of an important, some would say of the most important, part of the programme of the League, will draw many more members into its ranks, and thus in turn increase its possibilities of usefulness. The League makes its appeal on behalf of the cause of British music, not only to professional musicians, but also to that numerous class of intelligent amateurs who interest themselves in the spread of musical education, and on whose generous support so many musical schemes depend. The Hon. Secretary of the League is Mr. C. Copeley Harding, 32, Waterloo Street, Birmingham. The committee now includes a strong and representative body of musicians. subscription is one guinea per annum.

Dr. E. W. Taylor is to be heartily congratulated upon being re-elected Mayor of Stafford, a town of which he has long been 'chief musician.' In proposing the re-election of the Mayor, Alderman GreatRex said he believed that during the past year Dr. Taylor had discharged the duties of chief magistrate to the entire satisfaction of his colleagues and the inhabitants of the borough generally. He had had the distinguished honour of welcoming their beloved King to the borough when his majesty passed through on a recent occasion, an honour that very few mayors had experienced. During his year of office Dr. Taylor had assisted in providing funds for one of the greatest achievements, one of the greatest improvements that had been made within recent years in the borough, the reclaiming of the piece of land near the railway station, land which was, he might say, a howling wilderness, a desert which had been made to smile. That bijou park or pleasure ground, would be for years a lasting memento of those who took an active part in carrying it out. Perhaps the Mayor had in his mind S. S. Wesley's anthem 'The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad thereof, and the desert shall rejoice,' when he set his hand to the making of that bijou park or pleasure ground. Anyhow, it is pleasant to record the interests of musicians, other than those of 'fifths' and so forth, especially when they are of a philanthropic

Which is the most popular of the various portraits of Beethoven painted during his lifetime? There can be little doubt that, were the question put to the vote, the result would be that by Josef Stieler. Painted in 1819, it represents the master in what has the appearance of a dressing-gown, and an enormous white collar and cravat. The head is crowned by a mass of shaggy unkempt hair, and the eyes gaze thoughtfully out of the picture into the realm of Fantasy. In his left hand the composer holds some sheets of music paper marked 'Missa solemnis'; in the right hand is a pencil. The picture is the property of a niece of Spohr, Countess von Sauerma, who at present is residing in the German capital. This lady, according to Berlin papers, has decided to sell her famous treasure. She is old enough, we read, to have known Stieler personally, and her memory recalls the artist's description of the circumstances under which the picture was painted: Stieler had often asked Beethoven to give him a few sittings for his portrait, but the master either forgot these requests or was otherwise more profitably employed. After some years' fruitless waiting, he was one day surprised by After some Beethoven entering his studio. The master merely remarked: 'You know well enough for what purpose I have come.'

Stieler happened to have a rather small canvas ready, and he set to work at once to make the most of a rare opportunity. The face, hair, eyes most of a rare opportunity. and the master's fresh, healthy complexion he was able to fix upon his canvas from life, but for the hands he had, for lack of time, to rely upon his imagination. A glance at any good reproduction of the picture makes it very evident that these small, beautifully tapering fingers and 'dandy' nails cannot have belonged to the hands of a great and powerful pianist such as Beethoven was. It is a remarkable fact that none of the master's portraits reproduce his hands. This makes it seem doubly mortifying that the one artist who did represent the master in the act of writing was prevented from giving the world a truthful picture of this Titan's masterful fingers with which he drew from the pianoforte that marvellous music which, to quote his own words, was to 'strike fire within the human soul.'

At a meeting of the guarantors of the Hallé Concerts Society, Manchester, held on November 17, the chairman of the directors, Mr. E. J. Broadfield, announced that Dr. Richter felt that, as time was telling upon his powers of physical endurance, was impossible for him to undertake same amount of work as he had formerly done. Dr. Richter had therefore desired and designed partly to relinquish the conductorship of the concerts with a view to his ultimate retirement. He did not wish to leave them all at once; and the Executive had every reason to share his opinion as to the ability as well as insight and experience of Mr. Franz Beidler, who would this season conduct those concerts that Dr. Richter could not undertake, with the exception of the 'Omar Khayyam' concert, which Mr. Granville Bantock would himself conduct. It need hardly be said that Mr. Broadfield's announcement is a matter of serious interest in musical circles at Manchester, where for some eleven seasons Dr. Richter has conducted the concerts established more than half-a-century ago by Sir Charles Hallé. It will be remembered that Dr. Richter has also resigned the conductorship of the Gentlemen's Concerts, the oldest musical organization in Manchester, an office to which Mr. Franz Beidler has been permanently appointed.

Dr. McNaught contributed to the Daily Mail of November 5 a long and interesting article entitled 'The great choral revival: popular music in England to-day.' He began by saying:

The musical potentialities of the British nation are exploited by many diverse agencies, most of which reach only a fringe of the population. The masses are not much affected by colleges and academies. The villager, the miner, the mill-hand, and the town toiler have to work out their musical salvation by rougher means.

And then, in referring to the competition festival movement which has made such extraordinary headway up and down the country, he went on to remark that:

A few years ago it was said that choral music was decadent, and that the future was with instrumental music. But to-day there is a choral revival and expansion in process, and we seem to be well on the way to a choral millennium. The ferment is accompanied by a healthy craving for guidance and instruction, not often possible to gratify by ordinary ways and means. The need for some plan of study adapted to the circumstances and helpful to those who in isolation cannot help themselves, has led to the establishment of the competitive musical festival movement in England.

After treating in detail of the remarkable choral performances he, as adjudicator, has listened to in various places, even in villages, he optimistically concludes thus: 'It will be seen from all this that the full realization of the choral wealth of the country is a matter merely for organization vitalized by belief.'

Brighton is about to join the ranks of cities and towns that can boast of a four days' musical festival. This event—announced to take place next month, January 13 to 16—will witness the combination of the Brighton Municipal Orchestra, augmented to sixty performers, and the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society, consisting of 200 voices. On the first day Sir Edward Elgar will conduct his oratorio 'The Dream of Gerontius' and his 'In the South' overture. A novelty, in the 'Bon-Bon' Suite, for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, composed and conducted by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, will form an attractive feature of the second day's performance, together with a Wagner selection. On Friday, Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' will be given, and a miscellaneous concert, at which Mr. Edward German will conduct his 'Welsh Rhapsody,' will bring the festival to a close. Mr. Joseph Sainton, conductor of the Brighton Municipal Orchestra, is the musical director of the festival, and Mr. Robert Taylor, conductor of the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society, will take charge of the 'Elijah' performance. May all success attend this welcome music-making at the 'Queen of watering-places.'

Mr. Granville Bantock has been appointed to the Peyton Chair of Music in the University of Birmingham, in succession to Sir Edward Elgar, the first holder of that office, who has resigned. We hope to give a biographical sketch, with special portrait, of Professor Bantock in our January issue.

A Welsh newspaper has been falling foul of the concert-performance of 'Die Walküre' at the recent Bristol Festival. In an article headed 'Special criticism,' we read:

Wagner thought to acquire greatness by complexity. Saturday's performance was a mass of discords without resolution or cadence design, the music repeatedly closing on the leading note. At times every instrument of the ninety performers was playing away, and every part bearing no connection whatever with one another. The mental effect was grotesque.

As a parting shot, the writer says:

We forbear to give the name of the Welsh town referred to, as it might hurt the feelings of its inhabitants. Poor Wales! Poor 'special criticism.'

No part of the church service can be more unto edification than the chanting of the Psalms; on the other hand, how greatly devotion may be disturbed, even destroyed, by maltreatment of these matchless poems of Holy Writ. The increased attention which is now given to this important part of choir training calls for commendation and encouragement, and any aids that will promote good chanting should be welcomed.

The subject of pointing has been theorised upon for many years. Editors of Psalters have often evolved certain methods without putting them to a practical test. The individual, seated in the quietude of his study, may try over this or that verse, convinced that he has reached the Ultima Thule of chanting, but put his fine theories before an ordinary parish choir, and the result is failure. At the same time it must be admitted that, however carefully and practically a system may be thought out, its proper application is at the mercy of the choirmaster. To find fault with this or that Psalter because it is misused is not fair. Just as Sir Joshua Reynolds mixed his colours with brains, so a choirmaster should use the Psalter he has adopted with wisdom and understanding; moreover, when rehearsing his choir in chanting the Psalms, he should make use of whatever poetic feeling wherewith nature has endowed him.

With the foregoing as a preliminary, we may proceed to call attention to a Psalter which seeks to promote reverent chanting. Its title is the 'New Cathedral Psalter'; not that it is intended to supersede the original 'Cathedral Psalter'—one of the best that have been done—but it claims to be an improvement upon the popular system of pointing contained in that book. To quote from the Preface:

The chief aim of the musical editors has been to secure simplicity and clearness. They accept the two forms of Anglican chant (single and double), with their inevitable limitations, and they have endeavoured to make it easier for choirs and congregations to fit the Psalms to such chants, so that the words may run smoothly and the sense be intelligible. They regard the recitation as consisting of a bar of comparatively strict time (a tempo), preceded, more often than not, by syllables of varying number sung to an anticipation of the first chord of each section of the chant.

How is this a tempo bar indicated? In three different ways, corresponding to the three editions in which the Psalter is issued: (i.) with superimposed notes; (ii.) with prosody signs; (iii.) with varied type. Verses I and 2 of the Venite furnish a good example of the method adopted by the editors:

- O COME let us sing | unto · the | Lord : let us heartily rejoice in the | strength of | our sal- | vation.
 - Let us come before his presence with I thanks-| giving : and shew ourselves | glad in | him with | psalms.
 - O COME let us sīng | unto · the | Lord : let us heartily rejoice Yn the | strength of | our sal-| vation.
 - Let us come before his presence with l thanks- | giving : and shew ourselves | glad in | him with | psalms.
 - O COME let us sing | unto · the | Lord : let us heartily rejoice in the | strength of | our sal-| vation.
 - Let us come before his presence with I thanks-I giving: and shew ourselves I glad in I him with I psalms.

The above quotations demonstrate two important features of the system: (i.) that all ambiguity as to the merging of the recitation into the a tempo section of the chant is removed; and (ii.) the pointing is in every case identical, a matter of great advantage, for on such an occasion as a service sung by combined choirs all three books could, if found necessary, be used simultaneously.

The editors have acted wisely in removing doubtful points in the chanting of the Psalms: e.g., the pronunciation of the final ed as a separate syllable or not, and (to quote from the Preface):

In a few cases a hyphen is inserted between the syllables of words which youthful choristers might mispronounce; e.g., pot-sherd (Psalm XXII. 15), and Ca-des (Psalm XXIII.

For a similar reason an accent (") is placed on the first syllable of two troublesome words which are often maltreated: "commune" (Psalm IV. 4 and LXIV. 5) and "mischievous" (Psalm CXL. 8).

Again:

In the interest of congregational singing, the editors do not advocate sudden or extreme dynamic changes, and have therefore restricted the use of expression marks.

^{*} The New Cathedral Psalter . . . together with the Canticles and Proper Psalms for certain days. Edited and pointed for chanting by Cosmo Gordon Lang, D.D., Bishop of Stepney (Canon and Treasurer of St. Paul's); Henry Scott Holland, D.Litt. (Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's); Charles H. Lloyd, M.A., Mus. D. (Precentor of Eton); and George C. Martin, Mus. D. (Organist of St. Paul's).

In regard to typography—a most important consideration in a pointed Psalter—bolder-faced types, specially prepared, have been used, the result being greater clearness, while special attention has been paid to the spacing between the words and the lines in order to afford greater facility in reading.

The names of the editors—one of whom (Dr. Cosmo Lang), since the publication of the Psalter, has become Archbishop-designate of York—are a sufficient guarantee that the work whereunto they set their hands has been most conscientiously done, and that all the conditions towards perfecting a system of chanting have been fulfilled in the 'New Cathedral Psalter.'

A companion Chant - book, which is in active preparation, will be issued in three forms: (i.) chants of more or less difficulty for cathedral use; (ii.) chants suitable for use in churches that have competent choirs; and (iii.) chants, with low reciting-notes, that will meet the requirements of village choirs. In the meantime we understand that the new Psalter has already been adopted at St. Paul's Cathedral.

Church and Organ Music.

'FIGHT THE GOOD FIGHT WITH ALL THY MIGHT.'

This well-known hymn was written by the late Rev. J. S. B. Monsell and first appeared in his 'Hymns of Love and Praise' (1863). It is one of nearly 300 from the poetic pen of its saintly author, and while it has no known history, the tune ('Pentecost') with which the words are now associated has had an interesting and curious career. composer, the Rev. William Boyd, who comes from an old Scots stock of lowland border thieves—as he is wont to say-and is now Vicar of All Saints', Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, has been kind enough, in a pleasant conversation with the present writer, to tell the story of his popular tune. 'I began to compose,' he says, 'when I was a boy of ten years of age.

THE REV. WILLIAM BOYD, M.A.

COMPOSER OF THE TUNE 'PENTECOST' ('FIGHT THE GOOD FIGHT').

"Iceland, its scenes and sagas" (1863), by Baring-Gould. He was my tutor at Hurstpierpoint, and during his stay in Iceland (in 1862) he wrote to me often, exemplifying his letters by characteristic pen-and-ink sketches to describe men and things. For that, his first book, I put into harmonized shape some of the tunes he had noted down during his Icelandic scholar of my college (Worcester), and I also played at St. Edmund Hall, Trinity and Pembroke.' Here it should be stated that the Rev. Baring-Gould's first curacy was at Horbury, near Wakefield, a place which gave the name to Dykes's setting of 'Nearer, my God to Thee' my God, to Thee.'

To continue Mr. Boyd's narrative. 'Baring-Gould asked me to compose a tune to "Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire," to be sung at a large meeting of Yorkshire colliers at Whitsuntide which he had organized. I walked, talked, slept and ate with the words, and at last I evolved the tune which I naturally named "Pentecost," which had an enormous vogue in Yorkshire. One day, during my undergraduate period at Oxford, G. A. B. Beecroft, a Christ Church man and an amateur musician, came to me and said: "I want some fellows who write hymn-tunes above the average to contribute to a book I am getting upwrite me three." I agreed, and sent him four tunes, from Clent, in Worcestershire, where I was spending Christmas with my friend, John Amphlett—now a well-known literary figure in the country. One of these tunes was "Pentecost," which I had previously composed for Baring-Gould, but which remained in manuscript. Beecroft's collection was published by Bowden, of Oxford, in the sixties.'

Here is the title of that oblong octavo volume:

THIRTY-TWO | HYMN TUNES: | composed by | Members of the University of Oxford. | Price 2s. 6d. nett | Oxford: | W. R. Bowden, 35, Holywell-Street. | London: | Novello, Ewer Co. 1, Berner's Street; & 35, Poultry. [1868]

The Preface to the book reads thus:

These Tunes, of which two only have before been printed, are published almost entirely with a view of utilizing several Compositions by Members of this University, principally Amateurs, which found no place in existing Collections. It will be noticed that they are arranged in the order of their respective keys, with the intention of facilitating reference; and that opposite every Tune a page has been left blank, so that any words which may be deemed appropriate can be inserted.

The names of some of the fourteen contributors will Some of my youthful attempts you will find in readily be recognized, including that of the late Sir E. W. Hamilton; the two tunes which had been previously published were by Scotson Clark. Mr. Boyd's popular tune appeared in the following form:

PENTECOST. "COME, HOLY GHOST, OUR SOULS INSPIRE." W. Boyn.

Repeat * for two last lines 'How came the tune to be associated with "Fight the good fight"? we ask Mr. Boyd. 'Ah! that is a funny thing,' he replies. 'One day, as I was walking along Regent Street, I felt a slap on my back, and turning "My dear Billy," he said, "I've seen a tune of yours which I must have." (He was then editing Church Hymns.)
"All right," I said, "Send me a cheque and was sent to me, and when I saw the tune I was horrified to find that Sullivan had assigned it to "Fight the good fight"! We had a regular fisticuffs about it, but judging from the favour with which the tune has been received, I feel that Sullivan was right in so mating words and music.'

'The tune was printed in the 1875 edition of Hymns Ancient and Modern without my permission. In their last edition they turned me out, also without my permission. Still, they had to come back, I rejoice to say, for people said 'the old was better.' Since then it has found its way into most collections, Church of England and Nonconformist, and has gone all over the English-speaking world. There is hardly a week that I do not get a couple of letters, from far or near, asking me to allow of its insertion in some new publication. And I do, in most cases, allow it, but with the proviso that the tune must be set to the words "Fight the good fight." To give you an instance of its far-reaching sweep, let me mention a reminiscence. On landing at Jamaica in January, 1902, I was approaching the great church at Kingstonnow a desolation, since the earthquake-when, a quarter of a mile off, I heard my tune being heartily sung—bellowed, I had almost said—by a congregation of 2,000, mostly black people. The effect was of 2,000, mostly black people. The effect was deafening. And at the C.I.V.'s great service at St. Paul's Cathedral, on the eve of their departure for the Boer War, it rolled through the vast building with thrilling effect, Creighton, then Bishop of London, being "greatly moved," so he told me afterwards.' In answer to our request for a copy of his tune to be reproduced in facsimile for the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES, Mr. Boyd says 'With pleasure. It is only four notes! And I will write the heading "Pen-tecost," because "Pen" is the first syllable of No copy of the book, much less a proof, my wife's name and she is very fond of the tune.

We should here add that the King and the Prince took place in South Africa that the tune was not wafted of Wales always ask for the hymn and tune whenever from ten thousand throats, singing on the veldt to the function admits of it. It is sung at all Royal God Almighty as the God of Battles. 'It is the most confirmations—as indeed at most other confirmations; moving hymn I know,' said Lord Kitchener to it is the favourite of both soldiers and sailors, and Mr. Boyd, when he came to All Saints' as 'best man' schoolboys and undergraduates, and scarce a service at his brother's-Arthur Kitchener's-wedding.

Mr. Boyd, who has been Vicar of All Saints' since 1893, speaks in the highest terms of two of his organists, Dr. Bairstow-now of Leeds Parish Church, who came to him as a youth and held the post with distinction for six years—and the present holder of the office, Mr. William Wolstenholme. 'I want the Psalms to be beautifully sung,' is one of the conditions Mr. Boyd imposed upon both Bairstow and Wolstenholme. And is he not right? Would that all clergymen in authority held the same views with regard to this most important part of the services of the Church. 'You judge a choir,' says Mr. Boyd, 'by its versicles and responses, by its Psalms and its "Amens," the rest is easy sailing enough.'

The photograph of Mr. Boyd is a snapshot, of which he was unaware, taken in the gardens of the Constant Spring Hotel, Kingston, Jamaica.

THE LONDON CHURCH CHOIR ASSOCIATION.

The thirty-fifth annual festival was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday evening, November 12, in the presence of a large congregation. On this occasion, for the first time, the Association had the valuable co-operation of the Church Orchestral Society (conductor, Dr. G. F. Huntley), who played Elgar's Sursum Corda previous to the service and accompanied the choral portion of Evensong. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to the inspiring settings of T. A. Walmisley in the key of D minor, in which unison and harmony phrases are happily contrasted in the vocal portions, the beautiful melodious music to 'He, remembering his mercy' being an instance of what can be done harmonically by simple means.

For the anthem, Dr. Walford Davies had composed a motet, 'Grace unto you and peace,' the words selected from the Epistle to the Romans. This thoughtfully conceived work, which occupied thirteen minutes in performance, consists of four numbers, the first two containing solos for bass and soprano voices. The music throughout bears traces of a master hand—one who brings to his work that feeling of reverence and sincerity which merits full recognition and commendation. Special mention should be made of the way the composer builds up his motet, from the whispered beginning 'Grace unto you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ,' to the series of climaxes in the last number and the emphatic shouts of such phrases as that, for instance, at the words 'More than conquerors through Him that loved us.' Criticism of the rendering of the work at a service would be out of place. Suffice it to say that Dr. Walford Davies, the honorary conductor of the Association, conducted throughout (except the orchestral piece at the beginning), and that Dr. G. F. Huntley, the honorary organist, presided at the organ.

DONCASTER PARISH CHURCH.

The fiftieth anniversary (October 14) of the consecration of this noble church was worthily celebrated in music by a series of special services between October 11 and 18. morning and evening canticles were sung to settings by Basil Harwood (in A flat), Noble (in B minor), Lloyd (in E flat, Communion), Garrett (in D), Walmisley (in D minor), and Stanford (in B flat); and the anthems were 'Hail! gladdening Light' (Martin), 'I was glad,' Coronation anthem (Parry), and 'I saw the Lord' (Stainer). On October 22, Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' preceded by Martin's Te Deum in A, was rendered by an augmented choir of eighty voices and an orchestra of twenty-one players, under the able direction of Mr. Wilfrid E. Sanderson, organist and choirmaster of the church. Not only was the church crowded to its utmost capacity-2,000 people, 400 having to stand throughout the service—but over 700 persons were unable to gain admission! Everything passed off most satisfactorily, and the rendering of the music reflected the greatest credit upon Mr. Sanderson, who also gave an organ recital which was attended by 1,200 persons. One of the choir men sang at the consecration of the church half-a-century ago! We gave an illustrated article on Doncaster Parish Church in our issue of June, 1905. Dr. Edward Miller was a former organist of the church.

WESLEYAN SERVICE OF SONG, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

On October 28, in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, was held the fortieth annual service of the 'Wesleyan Service This is a somewhat remarkable instance of of Song.' longevity in such organizations, for, although there have been many imitations, none seem to have lasted many years. success of the Newcastle Service may be entirely attributed to the tact and generalship of the conductor, Mr. John B. Bowes, who has held that office for thirty-five years, and who, although he celebrated his golden wedding two years ago, is as young in heart and enthusiasm as the youngest member of his large and full-voiced choir.

The service consists of hymn-tunes, anthems, and choruses, interspersed with vocal and instrumental solos. The singers who take part number about 1,000 voices, representing about thirty-five Wesleyan choirs drawn from the two northern counties. This annual service has resulted in a great improvement in the individual choirs that take part, especially those from country places, while the effect of the immense volume of sound in the rendering of choruses by Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn and others has been magnificent; moreover, the congregational singing has immensely improved as a result of this annual gathering of combined choirs. Mr. Charles F. Bowes (son of the conductor) is the organist, and one of the honorary secretaries of this flourishing organization, his colleague being Mr. J. E. Lawrence.

RLY CATHEDRAL ORGAN.

DEAR SIR,—In the interesting account of the Ely organ contained in your October issue, the opinion is expressed that it is too brilliant, by reason of the excess of mixture work which it contains. As I was responsible directly for the insertion of the V rank mixture on the Great organ, and indirectly for some other special features in the tonal scheme, will you kindly allow me to say a word or two on the subject?

It is a well-known acoustical phenomenon that sounds of acute pitch do not travel so far and are much less pervading in large buildings than those of graver pitch. In most of our cathedrals the absorption of harmonic and upper partial tones is enormous. In the present instance not only was the building very large, but, to make matters worse, the Great organ had to be placed a long distance from the nave. Consequently, if the instrument as a whole was to be really effective to the congregation who chiefly sit there, it was necessary to make the organ very brilliant. It is possible, of course, that some critics—especially those who do not care much for mixture work—might find, when in close proximity to the organ, that the chorus work appears excessive. Except for special effects the V rank mixture above-mentioned is only intended to be used with the otherwise Full Great.

When attention is called to the fact that at Doncaster there are thirteen ranks on the Great and the same number on the Swell, and the individual ranks of Mixture at Armley are actually considerably more powerful than the five corresponding pipes of the large Open Diapason, it will be evident that the Ely mixture work is relatively less than that used by Schulze in much smaller buildings. Mr. Lewis's fine instrument at Southwark, and the Temple Church organ, both contain, I believe, nine ranks on the Great. If the builders have erred in making the Ely organ too brilliant, they are in good company. Except artistic merit, perhaps the only attribute which is common to the classical masterpieces by the greatest 19th century builders, such as Schulze, Cavaillé-Coll, Mr. T. C. Lewis, and last, but not least, Henry Willis, is brilliancy. Taking him all round, Willis was probably the greatest organ-builder the world has ever seen. He had no little experience in dealing with large buildings, as he built or rebuilt organs for well-nigh a score of cathedrals. He, at any rate, recognised these difficulties, for his instruments were possibly the most brilliant of all.

There is no necessary antagonism between plenty of brilliancy and abundant Diapason work. The present No. 3 Open Diapason on the Ely Great organ is similar to the large Diapason in the old organ, while No. 1 is now approximately three times as powerful. The so-called foundation work is also augmented by two other stops of 8-ft. pitch (open throughout), two of 16-ft., and one of 32-ft. In addition there is a great variety of quiet registers for purely accompanimental purposes.

Yours very faithfully,

GEORGE DIXON.

Trinity College, Cambridge.

[While we gladly print Major Dixon's letter, we must say that more than one musician well qualified to judge considers that the Ely mixtures are too assertive; moreover, they are on a slightly heavier wind-pressure (4 inches) than those of Doncaster and Southwark Cathedrals. It is necessary in these days of noise in music to raise a warning voice against anything tending towards that hyper-brilliancy which detracts from the dignity and solemnity of the church organ, for the instrument primarily justifies its existence as an accompaniment to voices in divine service.—ED. M. T.]

SPECIAL SERVICES.

'Thanksgiving Day' at Holy Trinity Church, Marylebone, was worthily celebrated in sacred song on November 8. At the morning service the anthem was Dr. Blair's 'There shall be showers of blessing.' In the afternoon service, preceded by the final movement of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, a large portion of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was sung by the festival choir with full professional orchestra and organ, and the March from 'Athalie' was played by the orchestra as an outgoing voluntary. The church was crowded in the evening, when the service was accompanied throughout by orchestra and organ. As an opening prelude Dr. Blair's effective 'Adoramus Te' was played. The special Psalms (149 and 150) were sung antiphonally by choir and congregation, the whole of the words, with the necessary pointing, being printed on the service paper. Dr. Charles Vincent's setting, in B flat, of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, composed expressly for the church, furnished the music for the canticles, and the anthem was the effective work composed by Mr. John E. West for the Gloucester Musical Festival of 1901, 'Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy house.' The various hymns—which included the tune 'Miles's Lane,' unfortunately in its distorted melodic version—were sung with great heartiness, and the whole of the day's music testified to the care and devotion with which Dr. Hugh Blair, the organist of the church, had carried out all the exacting details. Dr. Blair conducted at the afternoon and evening services, and Mr. Charles J. Long was an efficient organist.

The Oratorio Services held on Sunday afternoons in Brixton Church continue to maintain their interest and attractiveness. Not only is the church crowded by a congregation of 2,000 people, but it invariably happens that many would-be worshippers are turned away for want of room. On November I a selection from Gounod's 'Redemption' was sung, accompanied by a full professional orchestra, with Mr. Walter Hickin at the organ, and the choir consisted of about 120 picked voices. Mr. Douglas Redman, organist of the church, conducts these highly-appreciated services. With the exception of the south aisle—which is reserved for members of the Men's Brother-hood—no tickets are required for the area of the church. On December 6, Haydn's 'Creation' will be sung: the hour of service is 3, 30 p.m.

At the 199th recital of sacred music, on November 19, at Gloucester Cathedral—those enjoyable evenings which are so much appreciated in that city—the solo vocalists were Miss Laura Evans and Mr. Paul Edmonds. The quartet 'God is a Spirit' was sung by Master Lewis, Messrs. Bubb, Ranson and Vincent Jones; and the violinist was Miss Gordon, a student of the Royal College of Music. Organ solos were contributed by Mr. A. P. Porter, who also played the accompaniments, and Dr. Brewer, who conducted the choruses. As usual at these music-makings for the people, the congregation sang a hymn.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' (Part I.) was sung at St. Margaret's Church, Lee, on Sunday afternoon, November 15, by an augmented choir, accompanied by a quartet of brass, drums and organ. The solos were sung by boys and men of the regular choir—with Mr. W. G. Cleverly in the name-part, except that Mrs. Grounds sang the part assigned to the Angel. Mr. Frederick Leeds was at the organ, and the church was filled to its utmost capacity.

The twelfth choral festival of the Surrey Congregational Union was held on November 18 at Epsom Congregational Church, under the conductorship of Mr. Leonard H. Snow. Choirs from Dorking, Epsom, Ewell, Leatherhead, Sutton and West Croydon took part in the service, and Mr. Rich, organist of Sutton Congregational Church, gave a much appreciated organ recital.

Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants' (Psalm 42), soloist Miss Jessie Thurgood, was sung at a special service held at St. Matthew's Church, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, on November 11, under the direction of Mr. H. G. Baily, the honorary organist and choirmaster of the church. Mr. C. Brearley was at the organ.

At the first choir festival held in the Parish Church, Alloa, N.B., on November 3, Maunder's 'Penitence, Pardon, and Peace' was sung, in addition to some anthems, including Goss's 'Wilderness,' under the direction of Mr. Francis Sheard, precentor and organist.

At the Temple Church on all Friday afternoons in Advent, at 5.30, Brahms's 'Requiem' will be sung, under the direction of Dr. Walford Davies, who will accompany the work on the organ.

Brahms's 'Requiem' will be sung, with full orchestral accompaniment, at St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday evening, December 1, at 7 p.m.

Christ Church, Wanstead, was filled to overflowing on November 11 by an attentive congregation, on the occasion of the farewell organ recital given by Mr. Montague F. Phillips, prior to his entering upon the duties of organist and choirmaster of Esher Parish Church. In the vestry, at the conclusion of the recital, the Rector (Canon Corbett) presented Mr. Phillips with an illuminated address and a cheque from the choir and congregation, as a token of their appreciation of his musical gifts and of his efforts in maintaining a high standard in the rendering of the musical service. A member of the congregation also presented him with a gold English lever watch; and the choir-boys gave expression to their goodwill by handing to their departing choirmaster an illuminated address and a silver-mounted baton.

The death is recorded with regret of Mr. Thomas Troman, at University College Hospital, on October 29, after an operation. Born at Cradley Heath, Staffordshire, March 21, 1839, Mr. Troman held various organ appointments before he settled at Deal in 1892, as organist of St. George's Church, where his services were highly appreciated. In the same year he founded the Deal and Walmer Choral Society, which he conducted until his health gave way in the spring of 1907. Mr. Troman, who was an ardent Freemason, took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford in 1875, and was held in the highest respect.

Dr. H. C. Perrin, late organist of Canterbury Cathedral and now head of the musical department at McGill University, Montreal, gave a successful organ recital in Emmanuel Church in that city on October 31. His interpretation of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor is thus commented upon by the Gazette (Montreal): 'The firm and clear tempo at which this fugue was taken, the grand roll of the diapason tone of the organ which prevailed throughout the work, and the absence of any fantastic registration employed by some organists in rendering these great fugues of Bach, impressed the audience greatly.'

A committee has been formed in order to promote a testimonial to Dr. A. Madeley Richardson upon his retirement from the organistship of Southwark Cathedral at the end of the year, as 'a substantial sign of gratitude for, and appreciation of, his exceptional services on behalf of the cathedral music during the twelve years since its inception.' The honorary treasurer of the fund is Mr. W. Hughes, 62, Palace Road, Tulse Hill, S.W.

Professor J. C. Bridge, organist of Chester Cathedral, has composed an effective four-part setting of the carol, 'When Christ was born of Mary free' (Novello), in which, for the refrain 'Gloria in Excelsis, Deo,' he has felicitously introduced a traditional melody from the 'Chester Mystery Plays': MS. by James Miller. A.D. 1607.

The organ in St. Peter's Church, Cranley Gardens, Kensington, rebuilt and enlarged by Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons, was dedicated on October 29. Dr. Walter Alcock gave two recitals with much acceptance, and displayed the excellences of this fine instrument. We hope to give the specification in our next issue.

Dr. Warwick Jordan, on November 7, re-opened the organ at Leavesden Church, near Watford, which has been rebuilt and enlarged by Messrs. Lewis & Co.

Forty years of Music. 1865-1905. By Joseph Bennett. With twenty-four illustrations.

[Methuen & Co.]

When the announcement was made that Mr. Joseph Bennett was writing a book entitled 'Forty years of music,' everyone knew that its pages would be interesting and its style faultless. But curiosity was aroused as to the course he would pursue—to write a survey of music in England during his career, or to adopt the anecdotal-reminiscent method: the former appealing more to the literary musician with an historical bent, the latter to that larger circle of which the unit is known as 'the general reader.' Well, the veteran critic has chosen what he considers 'the better part,' and one and all will give his pages a hearty welcome if only for the sake of their gifted writer.

To criticise a critic, and such a master-critic, would be a serious undertaking, if not an impertinence, therefore attention will only be called to a few salient features of a volume that is readable from cover to cover. Not the least interesting portions of the narrative are the autobiographical touches here and there: the curious and unexpected way in which he was launched on his critical career; his experiences at the first of the hundred festivals he has attended, when (in 1865) he 'pinched' himself—i.e., financially—in order to 'do' it, 'going to Gloucester by the cheapest way and securing a bedroom in a row of little cottages some distance from the centre of the city. My food I could get as opportunity offered,' and so on. And then the number of friends Mr. Bennett has made, truly their number and their importance are prodigious. Here we find 'dear old Grove,' as editor of Macmillan's Magazine, writing to him about a suggested article on 'Cathedral choirs.' Grove said, 'The subject is not at all a bad one... There must be some delicious stories to be told about those establishments, which, though current enough in choirs and cloisters, have not yet emerged into the outer air.' Just like 'G'!

Much merry matter has reference to Mr. J. W. Davison and his 'Muttonians'—Dishley Peters, Thaddeus Egg, Flamborough Head (Grove), Dr. Shoe, and Dr. Silent—to Dr. S. S. Wesley, Sullivan, and many others. To attempt to pick the plums from these entertaining pages would fill many baskets; the reader must hasten to the heavily-laden trees of this anecdotal garden and gather the fruit thereof himself. Many letters give variety to the volume, which contains some amusing caricatures from the clever pen of Mr. Charles Lyall, in addition to portraits of musicians. Perhaps Mr. Bennett may some day give us a history of music in England as the result of his observations during his long and useful life.

NEW CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

A Song of joy. Composed by John E. West. Sing, O daughter of Zion. Composed by Herbert W. Wareing.

Thou art My Son. Composed by Thomas Adams. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

New anthems for Christmas are ever welcome, for although the joyous season comes every year it is ever fresh. The example by Mr. John E. West strikes the right key-note of Christmastide, for it is truly a song of joy. The text is taken from Wither's 'Hymns and Songs of the Church,' and its jubilant character is happily reflected in the music. This is contrapuntal in character but not complicated, and the points of imitation greatly add to the interest of the work. The bright opening is well contrasted by a second section of devotional character, and the repetition of the opening theme in slow tempo brings the anthem to an effective conclusion.

Dr. Herbert Wareing's anthem is simpler in character. It opens with a melodious duet for soprano and tenor which occupies two octavo pages and is succeeded by a chorus in four parts. The writing has the lilt of a Christmas carol, with an example of which the work concludes.

There are no solo parts in the setting of 'Thou art My Son,' by Mr. Thomas Adams. While the music is well within the means of average choirs, contrast is secured by short passages assigned to tenors and basses in unison and by a central section commenced by the sopranos and tenors, also in unison. The music is direct in expression and the harmonic scheme is diatonic. The anthem ends emphatically with the delivery, maestoso, of words which form the title, allied to a cleverly-conceived cadence.

The Life of Tolstoy: first fifty years. By Aylmer Maude.

[Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.]

In this part biography of the distinguished Russian Count, music occupies a somewhat prominent place. As a young man, Tolstoy 'devoted himself passionately to music, acquiring sufficient skill on the pianoforte to become an excellent and sympathetic accompanist. He was always susceptible to the influence of music, and in music as in literature had strong sympathies and antipathies.' Later on, in 1858 (ætat 30), he, with others, founded the Moscow Musical Society, which ultimately resulted in the formation of the Moscow Conservatoire, of which Nicholas Rubinstein became director. Tolstoy also played the guitar, sang passionate love songs, and was fond of playing pianoforte duets with his sister. One of the most interesting references to music in Mr. Aylmer Maude's attractive volume is Tolstoy's meeting with Tchaikovsky, which resulted in his sending to the composer a collection of folk-songs, with a letter in which he said: 'I send you the songs, dear Peter Ilyitch. . . . They will be a wonderful treasure in your hands. But for God's sake work them up and use them in a Mozart-Haydn style, and not in a Beethoven-Schumann-Berlioz artificial way, seeking the unexpected.' For Tchaikovsky's reply to this letter, the reader is referred to the book itself, in which he will find food for thought in regard to art-questions relating to music.

In the winter of 1861-2 we find Tolstoy teaching the peasant children of Yásnaya and the surrounding district, among the subjects being a singing-class. He adopted the system of numbers for sight-reading, as he considered it much more convenient for explaining both the intervals and the changes of key. Ear-tests formed part of the class work. One of the five conclusions at which Tolstoy arrived as a teacher of music was this: 'For the teaching of music to be willingly and fruitfully received, one must from the start teach the art and not aim merely at dexterity in singing or playing. Spoilt young ladies may be taught to play Burgmüller's exercises; but it is better not to teach the children of the people at all, than to teach them mechanically.' How true this is: these words of Tolstoy should be deeply pondered and acted upon by all teachers of music. Further quotation from this well-written book, which is sure to find favour with not a few readers, must be resisted.

NEW PART-SONGS.

A Christmas greeting. By Edward Elgar.
Seadrift. By S. Coleridge-Taylor.
A lullaby. By John B. Lott.
Tears, idle tears. By J. E. Adkins.
The curfew. By J. W. Elliott.
The sheep shearing song. Arranged by C. J. Sharp.
The promise. By James Lyon.

Sir Edward Elgar's 'Christmas greeting' should secure a permanent place in the repertory of choral societies. Designed for two sopranos (soli or chorus), tenor and chorus (ad lib.), with accompaniment for two violins and pianoforte, it consequently embraces many possibilities. The text, by Lady Elgar, and written in Rome in the Christmas month, 1907, contrasts the season in Italy with that in England, and thus furnishes the composer with opportunities for respective treatment, of which excellent use has been made. The work opens with a short instrumental introduction of considerable musical interest; the sopranos enter with the principal theme in 6-8 measure, which is taken up by the contraltos, and subsequently continued by the other voices. The vocal parts seem to be entirely developed from this material, but the writing is remarkable for its independence and variety, while the setting of the concluding words,

'Friends in storm or calm,' is peculiarly happy.

'Seadrift,' a setting by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor of T. B. Aldrich's poem, is described as a 'rhapsody for eight voices unaccompanied.' The music is dramatically conceived, and well rendered would prove most effective. The parts are not difficult to read, but a precision is required in the attack and an attention to gradations of vocal strength that call for careful rehearsal. A very fine climax increases the impressiveness of the finale.

It is refreshing to meet a Lullaby that is not in 6-8 measure. Mr. Lott has adopted triple time, and treats his subject in a novel manner. The words, by Gerald Hayward, are not perhaps what mothers habitually sing to their offspring, but the lines contain a pleasing touch of sentiment, and the last verse enables the composer to arrange an effective crescendo.

If the well-known lines, 'Tears, idle tears,' have been frequently set to music, Mr. J. E. Adkins's part-song is very welcome, for it is exceedingly well written and sympathetically echoes the sentiment of Tennyson's tender poem.

The 'Curfew' by Longfellow has also attracted many composers, including some of hyper-realistic tendencies, but Mr. J. W. Elliott has been content to intensify the significance of the lines rather than to illustrate them, and a charming little composition is the result.

Mr. Cecil J. Sharp's arrangement of 'The sheep shearing' folk-song as heard in Somerset is a sturdy and robust partsong, one that would provide admirable contrast amidst numbers of more sophisticated character.

'The Promise,' by Dr. James Lyon, should become popular, for its subject is the weather, and as the music illustrates the variations of temperature it will be surmised that the part-song includes much variety of expression. It ends optimistically with a confident assertion that 'We knew that the summer would come,' a gracious thought at this season of the year.

THE SHEFFIELD CHOIR IN CANADA.

From England to Canada and back in one month, within which limited period no fewer than sixteen concerts were given in the Dominion by Dr. Henry Coward and his Sheffield Choir of 200 voices, is to establish a record, and the successful completion of a musical undertaking which will rank possibly as one of the most extraor-dinary achievements in music of modern times. The reputation of Yorkshire singers generally, and the Sheffield Musical Union in particular, are too well known other than to say that it would prove impossible to give adequate expression to the adulation which has been unstintedly bestowed upon the British choralists by the entire Press of Canada for their magnificent work. To Dr. Charles Harriss, the bold originator of this remarkable expedition, the highest praise is justly due for his extraordinary plack, energy, and managerial skill.

Buildings that seat from three thousand to seven thousand persons have been taxed to their utmost capacity by the huge crowds bent upon hearing the Sheffield singers. Scenes of thrilling and spontaneous enthusiasm have been in evidence from the inaugural concert given at Montreal on Monday, November 2, to the farewell concert at Quebec on Friday, November 13, where French and British Canadians vied with each other in doing honour to the famous Choir from England. Thirty thousand Canadians must have listened to the music of the first week-in two concerts at the Montreal Arena, November 2-3; Ottawa Arena, November 4; and Toronto, Massey Hall, November 5, 6 and 7. Civic luncheons at Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto; banquets galore; the great honour of being presented to their Excellencies Larl Grey and the Countess Grey at Government House, and I adv. Allas's Montagens and Lady Allas's splendid functions at Sir Montague and Lady Allan's Mansion, 'Ravenscrag,' and at the beautiful residence of Sir George and Lady Drummond; and visits to the Bank of Montreal, the Houses of Parliament at the capital; supping with Dr. Harriss at 'Earnscliffe,' Ottawa; the banquet given by Dr. Vogt and the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto to 600 guests; the 'Welcome Ode' sung at the City Hall by Mr. Fletcher's Schubert Choir; the reception at the Clef Club; the Conversazione at the residence of Mr. Cox; the luncheons given respectively by Dr. Vogt and Dr. Ham, were some of the social functions attending this remarkable choral invasion of Canada. The first six days of the tour testified to the power of song for promoting loyalty and tightening more strongly than ever the cords which bind together the dwellers at home and their kith and kin beyond the seas.

Sunday, November 8, was an ideal rest-day, for the Choir's enjoyment of the beauty and wonder of Niagara Falls. The labours of the preceding strenuous week began anew, however, on November 9 with two concerts—one given on Canadian soil at Niagara in the afternoon, the other, in the evening, soil at Niagara in the arternoon, the other, in the evening, across the Border at Buffalo, N.Y. There, on American soil, His Majesty's birthday was duly celebrated by Canadians, Americans, and Britishers amid great musical rejoicing. A banquet at the Buffalo Club followed the evening concert given to the Choir by the Presidents and executive of the seven leading clubs and societies of Buffalo. Theselay November to reheard in societies of Buffalo. Tuesday, November 10, ushered in concerts at St. Catharines and Hamilton. At the former city the Daughters of the Empire provided luncheon; at the latter place a civic reception was held in the City Hall and the Elgar Choir sang, a supper following the concert at the Hamilton Club. Concerts in Brantford and London were given on November 11, the Mayor of London presenting an address of welcome to the Choir, the citizens afterwards entertaining them to supper. Thursday, November 12, concerts took place in Lindsay and Peterboro,' at the conclusion of which a special sleeping-car train conveyed the Choir to Montreal, there to board the S.S. 'Grampian' for the homeward voyage. One more concert, however, has yet to be mentioned, namely at Quebec, when the proceeds were devoted to religious institutions of the ancient and historic city. His Honor The Lieutenant-Governor Sir Alphonse Pelletier, K.C. M.G., together with the Mayor of Quebec, Sir George Garneau (who welcomed the choir to Canada two weeks ago), were present to bid the Choir God-speed. With the singing of 'Auld Lang Syne' and 'God save the King,' Dr. Coward and his splendid choral forces sailed for England.

Throughout the tour Dr. Coward again proved himself to be a man of great determination and will-power in extracting from his Choir 'live' singing at every performance. He spared himself not at all, neither spared he his colleagues. As for the members of the Sheffield Choir, no choral body has ever faced such an ordeal, or deserved more of their fellow men for their splendid efforts to uphold the fame of their conductor and British choral music. Honourable mention is also due of the members of the executive—Mr. Skelton, Mr. Lawson and Mr. Burrows—who bore lightly the burdens of much arduous work.

The principal vocalists were Miss Emily Breare, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. Robert Charlesworth. Miss Emily Breare (soprano) made an instantaneous and well-deserved success in Montreal, which followed her to Ottawa and elsewhere. Miss Gertrude Lonsdale (contralto) won many friends, her work being always sincere and artistic. Mr. Henry Brearley (tenor) scored an unqualified success, as did Mr. Robert Charlesworth (bass). Other soloists were Miss Eleanor Coward, Miss Kathleen Frankish, Miss Clara North, and Mr. Arthur S. Burrows. Mr. W. J. Phillips was indefatigable at the organ, and Mr. F. Staton did excellent work at the pianoforte.

THE WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF MUSICIANS.

At the Court meeting held on October 27, the following eminent musicians were elected honorary members of this ancient City Company: Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Walter Parratt, M.V.O., and Sir Hubert Parry, Bart., C.V.O. In the evening of the same day a large and distinguished assembly dined at Stationers' Hall as the guests of the Company, under the presidency of the Master (Mr. C. T. D. Crews). On that occasion the Lord Mayor Elect (Alderman Sir George Wyatt Truscott) was installed to the Office of Worshipful Master. During dinner the Band of the Royal Military School of Music (Kneller Hall) played a selection of pieces, and the post-prandial music was supplied by students of the Royal Academy of Music. The silver medal of the Musicians' Company—an annual recognition of good student work—was presented to Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell, of the Royal Academy of Music, and to Mr. H. L. C. Finucane, R.A., of the Royal Military School of Music.

On Monday afternoon, November 23, the Master (the Lord Mayor) and Liverymen attended the special St. Cecilia Day Service at St. Paul's Cathedral. A new hymn (processional), 'As the world turneth from evening to morning,' had been written by the Rev. Prebendary Bernard Reynolds and most effectively set to music by Sir George Martin; both words and music are admirably suited for choral festivals. In commemoration of the bicentenary of the death of Dr. Blow the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were from his Service in G, and the same composer's anthem (à 6) 'Sing we merrily unto God our Strength,' as edited by Mr. Charles Macpherson, was also sung.

In the evening the Livery Club of the Musicians' Company held their annual banquet in Stationers' Hall, the president, Mr. W. H. Ash, J.P., in the chair. As usual on such occasions, thanks to the care and thought given to it by Mr. Arthur F. Hill, the music was of great interest. A small but efficient band of strings and two flutes (Messrs. Fransella), ably conducted by Mr. Lennox Clayton, with Mr. Stanley Hawley at the pianoforte, were responsible for the instrumental portion of the programme. The vocalists were Miss Gladys Roberts; Master Brian Williams and Master Alfred Darling; also Messrs. Donald Reid, Frank J. Webster and George Stubbs, of St. Paul's Cathedral choir. The music consisted of portions of Odes to St. Cecilia; Boyce, Overture; Blow, Overture and chorus 'Come then with tuneful breath and string' (1684): Draghi, Overture, and song 'The soft, complaining flute,' sung by Miss Gladys Roberts; in addition to 'A song in praise of St. Cecilia' (Vaughan Richardson), and two songs from the 'Amphion Anglicus' (Blow), sung by Mr. Frank J. Webster. As on previous occasions the charm of this old-world music contributed not a little to the pleasures of a most enjoyable evening.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The twenty-ninth Triennial Norfolk and Norwich Festival was held in St. Andrew's Hall, October 28-31, and Mr. Henry J. Wood, who conducted for the first time at this music-making, has good reason to congratulate himself on the result. It has been the custom at Norwich and at other provincial festivals to open the proceedings with Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' The popular oratorio, however, was given at Norwich on the final day, and that being a Saturday doubtless enabled many engaged in business on other days in the week to hear the work. Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius,' heard on the Wednesday morning, drew a large audience. The soloists were Madame Julia Culp, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Herbert Brown, all intelligent and sympathetic interpreters. After its production at Birmingham in 1900, 'The Dream' soon won favour, which proved no Jonah's gourd, for it has not withered away, but increased in popularity. The choir sang well, but still better on the Thursday evening in another work of Sir Edward's, viz., the scenes from the saga of 'King Olaf,' at the close of which the composer was summoned to the platform and heartily cheered. All the choruses in this work are grateful to the singers, who certainly gave of their best.
The soloists, Mrs. Henry J. Wood and Messrs. Webster Millar and Frederic Austin, also deserve praise. In the programme scheme for the week was still another composition by Sir Edward, the 'Enigma' orchestral variations, and of this clever and delightful work Mr. Wood secured an admirable rendering.

Before mentioning the various standard works which were performed, reference should be made to the two novelties of the festival, neither of which was very successful. One was 'Christmas night,' a setting by Hugo Wolf for soli, chorus and orchestra of a hymn by Count August von Platen. Mr. Ernest Newman, a great admirer of the composer, says: '"Christnacht" is on the whole not a success, in spite of some fine moments,' and we are disposed to agree with him. But if we are not mistaken the music would sound better with a smaller choir and smaller orchestra. The work after all is unpretentious; yet, being placed in a festival programme, one is perhaps inclined to judge it from too high a standard. Moreover, it was preceded and followed by great works. Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Webster Millar were the soloists.

The other novelty was the cantata 'Cleopatra.' The libretto by Mr. Gerald Cumberland won for him a prize, as did Mr. Julius Harrison's setting of the same for soli, chorus and orchestra, both prizes being given by the Festival Committee. In writing this work the composer laboured under a double disadvantage: he did not select his libretto, and he wrote to order and within a given space of time. Under such conditions inspiration was not likely to be strong; again, works written to order have never, or hardly ever, proved masterpieces. The same disadvantages apply to the libretto; it is true the book suggests moods, but there is something artificial in its construction. Mr. Harrison's music is restless; he evidently tried to write in a big, modern style, but what he had to say was not sufficiently characteristic or convincing. The cantata is to be performed in London, when possibly opinion regarding it may be modified.

The performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' on October 29 was impressive, and Mr. Wood deserves hearty thanks for reviving this masterpiece of the Bohemian composer. Fine workmanship and strong emotion are combined in the music, one of the best works that emanated from Dvorák's pen. The excellent soloists were Mesdames Agnes Nicholls and Kirkby Lunn, and Messrs. Gervase Elwes and Herbert Witherspoon. Another great performance was that of Brahms's 'German Requiem,' with Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Dalton Baker as principals. Bach was represented by his cantata 'Phœbus and Pan,' his grand Magnificat in D, and his motet 'Praise ye the Lord'; the last-named work was given under the direction of the able chorus-master, Mr. Haydon Hare, to whom the excellent chorus-singing of the festival is justly due.

Many familiar instrumental works were admirably rendered by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, but space will not allow of all being mentioned. Beethoven's 'Choral' Symphony was given for the first time in Norwich, and the rendering was really excellent. Madame Carreño and Herr Fritz Kreisler must have been satisfied with the enthusiastic reception accorded to them; the former played the Tchaikovsky Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor, the latter Beethoven's Violin concerto.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

The recently-issued volume of the 'Proceedings of the Musical Association' (Thirty-fourth Session, 1907-8) contains he following papers read before the members of the Society:

Chimes and chime tunes. By W. W. Starmer.

Spanish music (2nd Paper). By the Rev. H. C. de Lafontaine.

The limits of artistic expression in music. By Ralph H. Bellairs.

The vagueness of musical nomenclature. By F. Gilbert Webb.

The vitality of melody. By Frank Kidson.

The evolution of melody. By Thomas F. Dunhill. Lute music of the 16th and 17th centuries. By Miss Janet Dodge.

The evolution of the flute. By T. Lea Southgate.

At the first meeting of the present session, held on November 3, Mr. Alfred Kastner read an interesting paper on 'The harp as a solo instrument and in the orchestra.'

The annual dinner of the Association was held on the same evening at the Criterion Restaurant, the retiring president, Sir Hubert Parry, in the chair, on which occasion the music performed was entirely selected from Sir Hubert's compositions. As we have already stated, the new president of the Association is Dr. W. H. Cummings.

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE IN SUSSEX.

The Principal of the Royal Academy of Music visited Tunbridge Wells—as, by the way, Handel did in 1735, though not with the same intent—on October 29, in order to conduct some of his compositions at Mr. Francis J. Foote's orchestral concert given at the Great Hall. On that occasion were performed the 'Astarte' prelude from 'Manfred,' the 'Pibroch' suite for violin and orchestra—the solo excellently played by Mr. Hans Wessely—and the breezy 'Britannia' overture. The programme included a tone-poem for orchestra entitled 'Elaine,' composed by Mr. Foote, and Schubert's B minor Symphony. These were also conducted by Sir Alexander, owing to the regrettable illness of Mr. Foote. Songs were contributed by Dr. Theo. Lierhammer.

At Devonshire Park, Eastbourne, on November 12, Sir Alexander again conducted his 'Britannia' overture, a typical sea-piece, the other compositions from his pen being the Prelude and Ballet-music from 'Colomba,' two movements — the Celtic Legend (No. 1), and Alla Zingara (No. 4)—from the new suite for violin and orchestra, the solos of which were exceedingly well rendered by Mr. Sidney Freedman, the young leader of the Duke of Devonshire's private orchestra at Eastbourne, and a former student of the Royal Academy of Music. The remainder of the programme, conducted by Mr. P. Tas, included Debussy's 'L'Aprèsmidi d'un Faune' and a Haydn symphony. Mr. Noel Fleming was the vocalist. Both concerts were a great success, and the distinguished visitor was very warmly received.

On November 25—too late for notice in the present issue—Sir Alexander Mackenzie was due to conduct the classical concert of the Brighton Municipal Orchestra, given at the Dome. The programme contained the following six instrumental works by the composer-conductor: the 'Astarte' Prelude ('Manfred'); Second 'Scottish Rhapsody, Burns'; Prelude and Ballet Music ('Colomba'); 'Britannia' overture; Larghetto and Allegretto for violoncello (soloist, Mr. Abbas); 'Pibroch' for violin (soloist, Mr. Percy Frostick), in addition to three songs (vocalist, Miss Edith Serpell)—'Lift my spirit up to thee,' 'What does little birdie say?', and 'We'll all make holiday.' Reference is made on p. 784 to the proposed Brighton Musical Festival, of which Mr. Joseph Sainton, conductor of the Municipal Orchestra, has been appointed musical director.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The most memorable performance at the concert given by the students of the Royal Academy of Music at Queen's Hall on November 18, was the rendering of an Elegy for twenty-four violins and organ, written by Mr. Frederick Corder In memoriam Victor Harris. The work is appropriately dignified, and is characterized by much sincere feeling happily expressed. The organ makes its entry towards the close with rich chords and deep pedal notes, thus forming a fine contrast to the other portions of the work. Conducted by the composer and played with the assistance of several professors of the Academy, the performance was worthy of the music and the occasion. Five preludes for the pianoforte by Olive Turner proved short and pleasing pieces that were tastefully played by Miss Kathleen Thomson. A clearly-written and melodious Pianoforte trio in E by Ethel F. Woodland, as rendered by Miss Irene Richardson Le Brun, Mr. John Mundy and Miss Elsie Jones, created a pleasant impression; and two expressive songs, respectively entitled 'Strew on her roses' and 'A song of March' by Alma Goatley, were expressively sung by Miss Dorothy Webb.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

MR. A. VON AHN CARSE'S SECOND SYMPHONY.

The concert given by the students of the Royal College of Music on November 19 was invested with a special interest through a pleasant act of courtesy, for the programme included the first performance of a Symphony in G minor, No. 2, composed by Mr. A. von Ahn Carse, an ex-student of the Royal Academy of Music. The opening movement of this work consists of an Allegro molto moderato, leading into an Allegro con brio chiefly built up with two admirably contrasted and melodious themes which are treated with contrasted and metodious themes which are treated with musicianly skill and, moreover, in a terse and interesting manner that rivets attention. The second number, marked Allegro vivo, is exceedingly gay; its chief measure is an old English country dance, while the central section is founded on a ground bass. The most important movement is, however, the third, an air and variations, which most elective arbitist the componer's melodic invention his clearly exhibits the composer's melodic invention, his command of the orchestra, and, above all in these days, a rare sense of beauty. The Finale is preceded by a short introduction, Molto moderato, which leads into a robust movement of martial character, containing a second subject of folk-song nature. In a word, the Symphony is instinct with emotional significance and a sanity very welcome in these days of wild striving. The composer conducted his composition with clearness and decision, and it was pleasing to observe the interest displayed by the orchestral players in a work by an ex-student of Tenterden Street.

Another novelty—since it was claimed to be the first performance in England—was Joschim's 'Hamlet' overture, a work dating from the year 1852. It cannot be said that the music throws any new light on Shakespeare's tragedy, but it is interesting as a composition by a celebrated musician. Mention is due of the brilliant and expressive pianoforte playing of Miss Winifred Gardiner in Schumann's Concerto; of Mr. Felix Salmond's tasteful rendering of Dvorák's 'Waldesruhe' for violoncello; and the singing of Mr. Ivor Walters and Miss Jean Evans. The concert was under the skilful direction of Sir Charles Stanford.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

This venerable institution is now adopting the policy of giving some of its concerts in the Winter months instead of concentrating them all in the Spring. It may be hoped that the experiment will prove successful. There is certainly no reason to suppose that metropolitan musicians have more time to attend concerts in the Spring than in the fall of the year. At the first concert of the season, given at Queen's Hall on November 12, the programme presented no special features. The 'Sinfonia Domestica' of Richard Strauss had been announced, but for some unexplained reason was withdrawn. Lalo's picturesque Norwegian Rhapsody was an effective first piece. The other purely orchestral items were Beethoven's Symphony in A and Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Caprice Espagnol.'

The last movement of the Symphony was brilliantly played at a great pace, but otherwise there was not much distinction in the performance. It may be presumed that the appearance of Kubelik attracted many of the fairly large audience present. The celebrated violinist played the thin and not interesting Concerto in D major by Paganini, and the more beautiful 'Havanaise' in G by Saint-Saëns. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Many performances of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' have been given by the Royal Choral Society at the Albert Hall, but it may confidently be said that the interpretation of this familiar oratorio on November 5, under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, was one of the best of the long series of choral works that have been heard at Kensington Gore. In regard to the choral portion, in such passages as 'His mercies on thousands fall' and the opening of the 'Baal' choruses, delicate gradations of tonal force were secured, while the delivery of the sentence 'Before Him on your faces fall' was a fine example of sotto voce choral singing; there was also evidence of joy in the delivery of the gratitude chorus 'Thanks be to God.' Mesdames Agnes Nicholls and Clara Butt were in excellent voice, the former singing with great purity and fervour, and the latter imparting a fierceness into the delivery of Jezebel's words that increased their dramatic significance. Mr. Dalton Baker gave a traditional rendering of the part of the Prophet, Mr. William Green sang with his usual finish, and an excellent subsidiary quartet was provided by Miss Florence Macnaughton, Miss Maud Wright, Mr. Albert Watson and Mr. Graham Smart. Mr. H. L. Balfour presided at the organ, but he made some additions to Mendelssohn's perfect organ part that were not justified.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

Those who toiled up Muswell Hill on Saturday evening, November 14, were rewarded with a commendable performance of Parry's 'Judith,' one of the genial composer's most genial creations. In the hands and the voices of the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society, the work suffered no ill-treatment, indeed it was evident that both singers and players were greatly moved to do their best and endeavour to realize all that the music demands. Dramatic fervour and clear enunciation of the words again bore testimony to the importance Mr. Allen Gill attaches to these vital elements in choral interpretations. In this respect his enthusiastic choralists may be encouraged to go on from strength to strength—that is, from note perfection to a glorified presentation of the music whereunto they have set their voices. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Charles Knowles, in addition to two boys from Mr. James Bates's School for Choristers, Master Brian Williams and Alfred Darling, the former of whom deserves praise for his artistic and unaffected singing. Mr. G. D. Cunningham was at the organ. The next concert, on December 12, when 'Hiawatha' is to be performed, should attract a large audience, as indeed should all these northern-heights music-makings.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

This Society made a promising start at the first concert of its sixth season, given at the Queen's Hall on November 4. The work presented was the first part of Mr. Granville Bantock's setting of 'Omar Khayyám.' The performance was, on the whole, a very good one, and again demonstrated Mr. Bantock's fertility of resource and opulent imaginativeness. But with all the fascination of the work as absolute music it is not always convincing as an adequate expression of the singular moods of the poem. The choir sang with commendable freedom and, as usual, displayed a musical, if not a rich tone. The Society is to be congratulated on its securing for this season's operations the assistance of the London Symphony Orchestra. The soloists were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Harry Dearth. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted. There was a good audience.

HANLEY GLEE AND MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

The Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted as usual by Mr. Henry J. Wood, gave a performance of 'Faust' (Berlioz), on November 14. The work had evidently been prepared with great care, and much of it was performed with striking success. If the 'Rakoczy' March did not create the effect it has done at some memorable performances, it may be said that the Sylph music and the other instrumental sections demanding subtle delicacy were beautifully given. An interesting and attractive feature of the concert was the London début of the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society, an organization of 200 voices trained by Mr. John James. This Society had already performed 'Faust' under Mr. Wood's direction in their own town, and the understanding between choir and conductor was therefore excellent. The tone of the Hanleychoralists was not imposing as sonority, but it had a fine quality that blended very acceptably. Once or twice the tenors broke out too enthusiastically, but as a rule the singing was refined, and the rhythmic accent was distinguished by an exceptional resiliency and daintiness. We have never heard the dream-chorus of Gnomes and Sylphs sung so charmingly as it was on this occasion. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. Walter Hyde, Mr. Robert Burnett (who was an unusually realistic Mephistopheles), and Mr. Francis Harford, who took the part of Brander. There was a large and appreciative audience.

The appearance of the Hanley Choir at Windsor Castle

SIR EDWARD ELGAR AT EASTBOURNE AND BOURNEMOUTH.

Two concerts, taking the form of an Elgar Festival, were given by the Devonshire Park Choral Society, with the assistance of the Duke of Devonshire's Orchestra, on November 18. The additional attraction of Sir Edward Elgar's presence as conductor of his own compositions not only drew large audiences but stimulated the performers to special efforts. The programme in the afternoon included the Meditation from the 'Light of life,' 'Sea pictures' (Miss Grainger Kerr), the second 'Wand of Youth' Suite, and the 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches Nos. 2 and 4, all of which were received with enthusiasm. Beethoven's 'Leonore' overture (No. 3) and the Prelude to Act 3 of 'Tristan and Isolde,' conducted by Mr. P. Tas, completed an excellent programme. In the evening the 'Dream of Gerontius' was successfully performed, the composer again conducting. The solo parts were undertaken by Miss Grainger Kerr, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. William Higley.

Sir Edward Elgar was also present at the Bournemouth Winter Gardens on November 21, and conducted a programme of his own compositions similar to that give at Eastbourne, but with the addition of the 'Enigma' variations. In this instance the 'Sea pictures' were sung by Miss Maud Santley.

BRIGHTON MUNICIPAL ORCHESTRA.

For some little time past the Brighton Municipal Orchestra, of forty players, conducted by Mr. Joseph Sainton, has been doing excellent work at the 'Queen of watering places,' especially on Wednesday evenings, when several British composers have directed concerts of their own productions in the presence of large and appreciative audiences. The visit of the band to St. James's Hall on November 21 was an admirable idea which might with advantage be considered by similar organizations, for it is calculated to stimulate the instrumentalists to raise the standard of the ensemble and form an advertisement. The capabilities of the Brighton Orchestra were shown in effective interpretations of the overtures to 'Tannhäuser' and 'William Tell,' Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony and Edward German's 'Welsh Rhapsody.' The soloists were Mr. Percy Frostick, principal violin of the Orchestra, the esteemed violoncellist, Mr. Abbas, and two vocalists, Miss Sara Nattier and Miss Alys Bateman, the former a contralto with a good voice which should repay further training.

'THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AT BURNLEY. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Dr. Crump, working hard and courageously, has induced the newly-formed Burnley Vocal Society to perform Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius,' a work of which he has an intimate knowledge. A performance of the sacred cantata was therefore given in the Mechanics' Institute on November 3, under his conductorship. The committee is to be greatly commended for the effort it made to secure a satisfactory interpretation of the work. An adequate band, drawn from the Halle Orchestra, was engaged, and its close acquaintance with the score enabled it to give excellent effect to the composer's all-important instrumentation. Two of the principals-Madame Alice Lakin and Mr. Herbert Brown—came straight, as it were, from the Norwich Musical Festival, and Mr. Alfred Heather joined these in rendering the solos of the title character. All things considered, the choir did encouragingly well, and best where the demands were greatest-in the demon chorus and in the double-chorus 'Praise to the Holiest.' The semi-chorus, one that can easily fail, more than preserved itself from that fate. Dr. Crump has gathered together excellent vocal material for this new Society, and has a good measure of important amateur support behind him. He and his choir should be able to render service to the cause of choral singing and choral performances in Lancashire, a county which has high traditions to maintain in this branch of the art.

London Concerts.

THE ST. PETERSBURG QUARTET.

An extremely interesting programme of Russian music was submitted by the St. Petersburg Quartet at Bechstein Hall on November 21. It consisted of Glazounoff's 'Five Novellettes,' Tanérèff's Quartet in D minor (Op. 7), and Tchaikovsky's Quartet in F (Op. 22). Tanérèff's work is so little known that it may be mentioned that it has only two movements, an Allegro and Theme and variations, possessing characteristic themes developed in a dramatic and picturesque manner. The interpretations were remarkable for significance and precision combined with rich quality of tone.

A large number of pianoforte recitals have been given during the past month, but only a few of them call for criticism for the reason that the works performed are as familiar as the style of their respective well-known interpreters. Special mention, however, is due of Miss Jolanda Méró, a young Hungarian pianist, who made her first appearance in London at Steinway Hall on October 30, and gave a second recital on November 6. Her programmes were pleasantly unhackneyed, and included the first performance of a Sonata in D, by Andor Saxlehmer. This work, though well laid out for the pianoforte, was of brilliant rather than serious design, but it served to demonstrate the remarkable facility of Miss Méró's technique, the boldness of her attack and phrasing, and her exquisite shading in tonal strength, a combination of attributes that held the audience as though spellbound. Miss Méró seems to impart a personality to all she plays, and that personality has a peculiar fascination.

The Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union gave an excellent performance of Elgar's 'Caractacus' at the Bermondsey Town Hall on November 12. Dr. Borland, who conducted as usual, had every reason to be satisfied with the work of his choir, whose intelligence enabled them to impart the right atmosphere to the choral portions. The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Marwood, Mr. Vivian Bennetts, Mr. Daniel Price and Mr. Charles Young. Elgar's works, for their effective rendering, depend much on the work of the orchestra, and in this case the band was exceptionally good in all departments. Grieg's first 'Peer Gynt' Suite opened the concert.

Miss Vera Margolies gave a most successful pianoforte recital at Steinway Hall on November 17, when she charmed her audience with a beautiful rendering of Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor (Op. 35). The remainder of her interesting programme was played with much artistic insight, and the Arabesques on the 'Blue Danube' Valse of Strauss (Schulz-Evler) received a most enthusiastic encore.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, November 15, 1908.

A new theatre, called the 'Johann Strauss Theatre,' has just been completed and opened with all due ceremony. For the present, at any rate, it is to be devoted to operetta, so that we now have four houses which open their portals to the light-winged tone-muse. Serious-minded music-lovers had opportunities of enjoying many an interesting evening at the Court Opera House and the Volksoper: the former gave an excellently prepared revival of Mehul's 'Joseph and his brethren,' as well as several very successful performances by the heroic tenor, Burrian, of the Dresden Opera, who came as a 'guest.' At the Volksoper, Adam's 'Postillon de Lonjumeau' and Rossini's 'William Tell' have been freshly studied. Both attracted crowded audiences. The productions of our contemporary writers of music-dramas generally enjoy such brief spells of existence, that operatic managers are only too glad to return to the older favourites whose operas still retain plenty of vitality.

In our concert rooms the greatest activity has prevailed since the end of October. Concert-givers almost hustle each other in feverish excitement, and by the side of much that is valuable, much more that is mediocre is brought into the musical market. It is especially the numberless pianists and song-recitalists who occupy our concert rooms on more or less debatable grounds. Of first-rate importance and accompanied by brilliant success were the appearances of the violin virtuoso Henri Marteau, and the much-feted tenor Signor Bonci.

The direction of the Philharmonic concerts is now exclusively in the hands of Felix Weingartner. The first concert, devoted to classical masterpieces, was strikingly successful, the famous conductor receiving great ovations. The Singverein of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation by 'festival' performances of two Masses—Bach in B minor and Beethoven in D. The solo quartet engaged in these works—Frau Noordewier-Reddingius, Frau von Kraus—Obsorne, Herr Felix Senius and Dr. von Kraus—also joined their forces in giving a vocal-quartet concert, at which they sang Schumann's 'Spanisches Liederspiel' and Brahms's 'Liebeslieder' waltzes, creating genuine enthusiasm.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first chamber concert of the Queen's College season took place on November 5. The Verbrugghen String Quartet performed a fine selection of classical chamber music, and Miss W. Kisack contributed some songs.

The second subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on November 20, when a very good performance was given of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' (Parts 1 and 2). The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister and Messrs. James Davis and Ivor Foster. The work for chorus and orchestra had been most carefully prepared by Dr. Koeller, and the result reflected credit upon all concerned. Of the soloists, the singing of Miss Lister may be especially praised without disparagement of her associates. In the second part of the concert the orchestra played arrangements of Weber's 'L'Invitation à la Valse' (orchestrated by Berlioz) and Rossini's 'Cenerentola' overture.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Midland Musical Society's performance of 'Elijah,' given in the Town Hall on November 7, proved a distinct success. The singing of the chorus was noteworthy, and the orchestra gave the overture and accompaniments with all due care. The principal parts were assigned to Madame Alice Phillips, Madame Grace Ivell, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. Herbert Parker (Lichfield Cathedral), an excellent quartet of artists who did complete justice to the music allotted to them.

Mr. A. J. Cotton conducted with his customary ability, and Mr. C. W. Perkins rendered valuable service at the organ.

We have had visits from Madame Melba, and from
M. Ysaye, who had as his coadjutor Miss Irene Scharrer.

The Birmingham Concerts Society gave its first orchestral concert of the season in the Town Hall on November 3, under Mr. George Halford's conductorship. The novelty of the evening was Smetana's symphonic poem 'Sarka,' which received a brilliant exposition, and Mischa Elman gave a superb rendering of Beethoven's Violin concerto. At the second concert on November 17, also under Mr. George Halford's baton, M. Arthur de Greef, gave a virile and masterly interpretation of Grieg's Pianoforte concerto and Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte concerto No. 2, in G minor. The orchestral novelty was Mr. J. C. Ames's short but beautifully scored symphonic poem 'The dying swan,' based on Tennyson's poem.

The second Harrison Concert of the current series was

The second Harrison Concert of the current series was given in the Town Hall on November 16, at which Mr. Jan Kubelik appeared, after an absence of some years. The New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, accompanied the celebrated violinist in Mendelssohn's Concerto, of which he gave a brilliant and artistic reading.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND BATH. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first Clifton chamber concert of the seventh season was held at the Victoria Rooms on November 5, and there was a large attendance. The players were Messrs. Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), Percy Lewis (violoncello), and Herbert Parsons (pianoforte). Excellent performances of Tchaikovsky's Trio in A minor (Op. 50) (Messrs. Parsons, Alexander, and Lewis), and Brahms's String quartet in B flat (Op. 67) were afforded. Mr. Lewis contributed the first movement of Lalo's Concerto in D minor, and Mr. Parsons movements from Brahms's Fantasien' (Op. 116), the solos being admirably rendered.

On November 7 the recently-formed Children's Musical Association gave a successful concert at the Bristol Blind Asylum Hall. The Association aims at developing the musical talent of children belonging to the upper classes, us well as those of the working classes who otherwise might have no opportunity of making use of their gifts. Those who took part in the performance were the Misses Marion Neale, Iris Rickman, Gertrude Sommerton, Winifred Smyth, Elsie Jenkins, Beatrice Barber and Violet Fussel. Considerable merit was displayed by the youthful aspirants.

Under the direction of Mr. Cedric Bucknall (organist of All Saints' Church, Clifton), a musical society has been formed in connection with Bristol University College. The object of the new organization is to promote the study and practice of music among the members of the College.

BATH.

The Avon Vale Musical Society gave a concert at the Assembly Rooms, on November 11, before a numerous audience. Band (leader, Mrs. H. G. Terry) and chorus numbered 150 performers, the conductor being Mr. J. S. Liddle. After a performance of Bach's Suite in B minor for strings and flute, Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' was given in a highly creditable manner. Madame Le Mar sang the music of Galatea, Mr. Maxwell that of Acis, Mr. W. Fell that of Damon, and Mr. F. Ranalow that of Polyphemus.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Oratorio Society gave its first concert for the season on November 3. The programme consisted of the Grail Scene from 'Parsifal,' Gounod's 'Gallia,' and Vincent O'Brien's 'An Easter Hymn.' Miss Amy Castles sang the solo in 'Gallia,' Mr. Henry Beaumont was the soloist in 'An Easter Hymn,' and a boys' choir from St. Mary's Schools assisted the Society in the 'Parsifal' selection. Mr. Arthur Darley was the leader of the orchestra, and Mr. Vincent O'Brien conducted.

On November 12 the Royal Irish Academy of Music gave a concert in the Royal University Hall, by kind permission of the Senate. The orchestra, under Dr. Jozé, played the overtures to 'The crown diamonds' and 'The daughter of the regiment,' in addition to Mendelssohn's 'Wedding march.' The vocalists were Miss Kathleen Rooke, Miss Eileen Stephens, Miss L. Jackson-Jones, Miss Nettie Edwards, Miss Winifred Allen and Mr. Thomas Collins. Miss Kathleen Hinds and Mr. H. V. Love played some pianoforte solos, Miss Alice MacCarthy and Miss Marie Dowse contributed violin solos. Miss Marjorie Graham was the violoncellist, and Miss Irene Johnston the solo organist.

On November 14, Mr. Joshua Watson (violinist) and Miss Dorothy Bewley (pianist) gave a sonata recital in the Aberdeen Hall. In addition to sonatas by Mozart and Beethoven, they each played various solos, and an interesting selection of songs was contributed by Mr. Herbert Walenn.

On November 17 the Amphion Choir gave a concert, under the conductorship of Dr. G. B. White. The programme included Mendelssohn's '42nd Psalm,' in which the accompaniments were played by the orchestra of the Leinster School of Music, and 'Love and Youth,' by Cornelius. The Leinster School of Music Orchestra, under Mr. Joshua Watson, played Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto, and solos were sung by members of the choir.

The Chamber Music Recitals at the Royal Dublin Society

The Chamber Music Recitals at the Royal Dublin Society commenced on November 2 with a pianoforte recital by Dr. Esposito, who played Beethoven's 'Appassionata' Sonata, Schumann's 'Carneval,' Chopin's Berceuse and Ballade in A flat, and his own three Ballades (Op. 59). Dr. Esposito, who has not given a pianoforte recital here for some years, was accorded a most flattering reception by a crowded audience.

for some years, was accorded a most flattering reception by a crowded audience.

The Sunday Orchestral Concerts started auspiciously on November 8 by attracting a very large audience. Dr. Esposito conducted as usual, and the programme included Beethoven's second Symphony. Madame Nora Borel was the vocalist and Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees the solo violoncellist. On November 15 the programme included Mozart's Symphony in G minor and Bizet's 'Jeux d'enfants' suite. Mr. J. C. Browner was the vocalist and Herr Adolf Wilhelmj the solo violinist.

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave a concert on November 18, when the programme contained Dr. Esposito's 'Irish' symphony which gained the composition prize at the Feis Ceoil in 1902. The work, which had not been played since that year, proved most interesting, the thematic material being entirely composed of old Irish tunes treated throughout in a most masterly manner. The principal novelty was Paul Dukas's remarkable 'L'apprenti sorcier,' performed for the first time in Ireland. An entr'acte from Massenet's music to 'Les Erinnyes,' Mendelssohn's 'Melusine,' and Wagner's 'Meistersinger' overtures completed the programme.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first of the Edinburgh Classical Concerts, given in the Music Hall on November 2, took the form of a violin recital by Mr. Eugene Ysaye, accompanied by his brother, Mr. Theo. Ysaye. At the second concert of the series, given on November 14, the St. Petersburg Quartet created great enthusiasm. The instruments used are all by members of the Guarnerius family, and this secures a homogeneity of tone-colour as rare as it is delightful. The vocalist was Miss Camille Vincent.

Mr. Paul Della Torre's annual pianoforte recital was given in the Freemasons' Hall on November 9. On this occasion he was assisted by his pupil, Miss Berta Tait, who made a highly-successful début.

The first of the University Historical Concerts was given in the Music Class Room on November 11. The programme, devoted to compositions by J. S. Bach, consisted chiefly of solo church cantatas with accompaniment of organ, string quartet, and oboe. Professor Niecks conducted. The soloists were Miss Betty Booker (soprano), and Mr. Harford (bass). Mr. Matthew Shirlaw performed the Toccata in F major on the organ, and Mr. J. Peebles Conn, the leader of the quartet, played the Sonata in G minor for violin alone.

The Central Hall Saturday Evening Popular Concerts, under the able management of Mr. Martin Hobkirk, are again drawing crowded audiences. These concerts, by providing at popular prices programmes of high-class music, have won recognition as an important feature in the musical life of the city.

The first of Messrs. Paterson's orchestral concerts—Dr. Cowen conducting—was given in the M'Ewen Hall on November 16. The programme included Tchaikovsky's G minor Symphony, which received an exceptionally fine rendering, and Madame Kirkby Lunn sang Berlioz's 'La Captive' and Mozart's 'Voi che sapete' superbly. Miss Theo Hunter and Miss Mabel Barrons gave a violin

Miss Theo Hunter and Miss Mabel Barrons gave a violin and pianoforte recital in the Freemasons' Hall on November 16. The standard of performance reached a high level of excellence, and both artists had to respond to numerous recalls.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The opera class at the Athenaum School of Music gave six performances of Weber's 'Der Freischütz,' October 26 The appearance made by both principals and chorus was highly creditable to Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, the conductor, and all concerned. A feature of the performances was the fine orchestral accompaniment by a band composed mainly of students of the School. The only other notable event of the month was the opening concert of the season given by the Choral and Orchestral Union on November 17, when Dr. Cowen and the Scottish Orchestra were warmly welcomed by a large audience. On this occasion Tchaikovsky's first Symphony was brought to a first hearing at these concerts, and a charming rendering of fourth Brandenburg concerto was given, the solo parts for violin and two flutes being played by Mr. Henri Verbrugghen and Messrs. Halstead and Picton. Madame Kirkby Lunn, at these concerts, and a charming rendering of Bach's as solo vocalist, sang most beautifully Berlioz's 'La Captive,' and excerpts from Wagner and Mozart. The Saturday Popular Concerts were resumed on November 21, when an attractive programme, which included Dvorák's 'New World' symphony, the 'Leonora' (No. 1) and Sullivan's 'Macbeth' overtures, was presented. Lunn again appeared as the solo vocalist. Madame Kirkby

The first concert of the Welsh Choral Union on November 14 was devoted to Elgar's music: the 'Dream of Gerontius,' the suite 'The Wand of Youth,' the songs 'Pipes of Pan,' 'In haven,' and 'Where corals lie,' and one of the new part-songs, 'O wild west Wind.' As regards the performance of the choral works, the Welsh Choral Union have themselves fixed the highest of standards. Generally speaking, their latest performance quite, or nearly quite, reached the level of their former splendid achievements. The prodigious force and enthusiasm of the full choir was as apparent as ever, and there was an adequate orchestra. Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Ivor Foster were the principals, and Mr. Harry Evans, the conductor of this excellent organization, is to be warmly congratulated upon the success of his unwearying labours.

The Societa Armonica played Brahms's third Symphony, in F, at its 145th concert on October 31, which was auspiciously opened with the 'Oberon' overture. Reinecke's Pianoforte concerto in F sharp minor served to display the fluent technique and musical perception of Mr. Hague Kinsey, as also did Chopin's Nocturne in F sharp. The vocalist was Miss Nance Muckelt. This estimable Society, which comprises in its orchestra of eighty nearly half that number of lady 'strings,' deserves commendation upon its sustained improvement.

At the Philharmonic concert on October 27, Vincent d'Indy's symphony 'La Forêt Enchantée,' Haydn's Symphony No. 24, in G minor ('La Poule'), and the 'William Tell' overture were performed, under Dr. Cowen's I the organ.

direction. M. Ysaye played Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor, and Mr. Walter Hyde was the vocalist. Dr. Cowen's cantata 'The sleeping beauty' was sung at the third concert on November 10, with Miss Edith Evans, Miss Frederica Richardson (Mrs. F. H. Cowen), Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Dalton Baker as vocal principals. The programme included Dr. A. H. Brewer's descriptive ballad for baritone solo and chorus, 'Sir Patrick Spens' (soloist, Mr. Dalton Baker), a clever work which was appreciatively received.

At the concert given by the Misses McCullagh on November 3, special interest attached to the singing of Miss Edith McCullagh, whose mezzo-soprano voice is of attractive quality and admirably managed. The Misses Isabel, Mary and Helena McCullagh, sisters of the concert-giver, formed a trio of instrumentalists, violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, who effectively rendered Saint-Saëns's Trio in F (Op. 18). Songs were also contributed by Mr. Byndon-Ayres.

The Orchestral Society commenced its concerts on October 24, when Mr. Granville Bantock conducted the fine band in Tchaikovsky's Overture 'L'Orage' (Op. 76), for the first time here, and Fantasia 'Francesca da Rimini' (Op. 32). After the interval, Mr. Landon Ronald assumed the baton and ably conducted, from memory, Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, in E minor. The vocalist was Mr. Hamilton Harris.

At the Gentlemen's Concert, on November 7, Bach's Suite in C, Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll,' and a new Symphony by Reznicek were played. The vocalist was Mr. Hardy Jackson. Mr. Granville Bantock conducted.

Mr. John Lawson had a crowded audience at his concert in St. George's Hall on November 7, when this prominent violinist conducted his pupils' orchestra in Nicolai's 'Merry Wives' overture and Tchaikovsky's 'Valse' from the 'Serenade,' and himself played two movements from Bach's Violin concerto in A minor. Among others, two promising violinists, Masters Mihaly Nyari and Benson Hodgson, reflected credit on themselves and on their teacher.

Among many miscellaneous concerts lately may be noted the visits of Kreisler and Madame Blanche Marchesi, with MM. Busoni and Szigeti, and Mr. McCormack. Miss Marie Hall gave a recital in the Shakespeare Theatre on November 13, and Kubelik played with the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, on November 17.

The first of the new series of chamber concerts established by Mr. Laurence Atkinson in the Town Hall, Birkenhead, took place on November 18, when Miss Fanny Davies played and Mr. Frederic Austin sang.

In the cause of charity, seven successful performances of Planquette's 'Les Cloches de Corneville' were given in the Irving Theatre, Seacombe, by the Wallasey Amateur Opera Society, which included many excellent performers, under the direction of Dr. James Lyon.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)
At the Hallé concert on October 29 the Symphony was Mozat's in C (the 'Jupiter'); and the Paris Venusberg-Music, and Elgar's 'In the South' Overture were also performed, under Dr. Richter. Mr. Kreisler played the Mendelssohn Concerto, and Wieniawski's 'Airs Russe.' Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed at the concert of November 5. The chorus, of about two hundred and fifty voices, sang extremely well. The colour which, by intelligently graded tone, they put into their work was specially noticeable, as in 'The Lord He is good,' in 'O be gracious, ye immortals,' in the 'Stone him to death' and, most effectively of all, in 'Sleepers, wake!' 'St. Paul' has returned to the programmes after sixteen years' absence. 'Judas Maccabacus' is to follow this season. It seems as if Mr. R. H. Wilson, the chorus-master, and his intelligent and enthusiastic forces are to have their fine, valuable services more generously acknowledged. The soloists were Madame Mary Conly, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Charles Clark; Mr. C. H. Fogg was at the organ.

At the concert of November 19 there was secured a quite magnificent rendering of Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini' fantaisie, the other orchestral items being Liszt's Symphonic poem 'Les Préludes' and Robert Volkmann's Symphony No. 1, in D minor. Mr. Busoni played delightfully Mozart's Pianoforte concerto in D minor and Liszt's 'St. Francis Legends.' Mr. Franz Beidler conducted both concerts.

At the concert of November 12, the Symphony was the 'Harold in Italy' of Berlioz, the solo viola part being played with fine tone by Mr. Simon Speelman. The overture to 'The Cid' (Cornelius) was played for the first time here, and Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto (in G) for the second time. Madame Blauvelt was the vocalist.

At the afternoon recital of the Gentlemen's Concerts on November 4, Mr. Kreisler played a Viotti Concerto and, among familiar pieces, the Rhapsodie Piedmontese (Op. 26) of the Italian composer and violinist Leone Sinigaglia, the pianoforte accompaniment being played by Mr. Haddon Squire. Miss Edith Evans was the vocalist. At the concert on November 16, the orchestral selections were the overtures to Siegfried Wagner's 'Brüder Lüstig' and to Borodin's 'Prince Igor,' and Granville Bantock's 'Helena' Variations—on the 'H. F. B.' theme. Miss Stroobants, of the Hallé Orchestra, was the soloist in the Concertstück for harp and orchestra (Op. 39), of Gabriel Pierné, and Mr. Edward Isaacs gave a brilliant rendering of the pianoforte part in Hummel's rarely-played Concerto in A minor (Op. 85). Madame Louise Dale was the vocalist. Mr. Max Mayer gave the first of his chamber concerts—twentieth season—on November 9, when Madame Marie Soldat joined him in a fine performance of three of Beethoven's Sonatas for pianoforte and violin. Mr. Horatio Connell was the vocalist.

At the first of the Schiller-Anstalt concerts (directed by Mr. Carl Fuchs) on October 31, Mr. Willibald Richter played Schubert's Pianoforte sonata in A minor (Op. 42), and with Madame Marie Soldat (violin) and Mr. Carl Fuchs (violoncello), Brahms's Trio in B (Op. 8). Madame Soldat played Bach's Suite in E (with the two Minuets), and Mr. Carl Fuchs's three violoncello solos. Madame Eleanor Cleaver-Simon and Mr. Ingo Simon were the vocalists.

The first concert of the second season of the Edith Robinson Quartet—Miss Edith Robinson, Miss Isabel McCullagh, Miss Edith Craven and Miss Mary McCullagh—was given on November 2, when the programme consisted of the following Quartets: Schubert's in A minor (Op. 29), Hugo Wolf's in D minor, Spohr's in G minor (Op. 27), and a violin and viola Sonata by Leclair, played by Miss Isabel McCullagh and Miss Edith Craven.

At the second of the Promenade Concerts on October 31 the programme included two overtures—Sullivan's 'Di Ballo' and Smetana's 'The bartered bride,' in addition to Saint-Saëns's 'Suite Algérienne,' 'Two Elegiac Melodies' for strings, by Grieg (Op. 34), and Max Bruch's Violin concerto in D minor (Op. 44), with Mr. Rawdon Briggs as the soloist. Mr. Robert Radford sang. The following concert, on November 14, constituted a Tchaikovsky night, with the '1812' overture; the Valse movement from the Serenade for strings (Op. 48); movements from the fourth sand the sixth Symphonies; the 'Italian' Caprice (Op. 45); and the Andante cantabile of the String quartet in D (Op. 11), played by all the strings, muted. Mr. J. H. Foulds played Max Bruch's arrangement of 'Kol Nidrei' airs (Op. 47), for violoncello. Miss Jenny Taggart was the vocalist.

At Mr. Brand Lane's first subscription concert, Madame Melba, Sir Charles Santley, and Lady Hallé appeared. Mr. Lane's Philharmonic Choir sang delightfully a number of part-songs and choruses, including Stafford Smith's setting of Milton's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' Caldicott's 'The message,' Dr. Lloyd's eight-part chorus, 'The rosy dawn,' Sullivan's 'The long day closes,' and Macirone's chorus, 'Jog on the footpath way.' The choral performances are a constant and striking feature of all Mr. Brand Lane's concerts, and are immensely enjoyed by great audiences. The chorir profits while it pleases, and sings with a nicety of expression that is turned to admirable account when the great choral works are produced. Lady Hallé's first violin solo was a Suite by Johann Baptist Neruda, who died in 1780, and who was a member of the historic family of violin virtuosi to which Lady Hallé belongs. At Mr. Lane's second concert, on November 7, Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed before an audience literally vast. Madame Albani, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Kennerley Rumford were the soloists.

The first concert of the second season of French concerts was specially interesting, being devoted largely to old French music played upon the instruments of the time by the Pollain Quartet: Mlle. Marguerite Delcourt (harpsichord), Mr. Georges Jamar (pardessus de viole—treble viol), Mr. Jurgensen (viole d'amour), and Mr. Fernand Pollain (viole da gamba). Madame Auguez de Montalant sang groups of French songs, old and new, the latter by Mr. Victor Gallois, who accompanied. Mlle. Delcourt paid English Art a little compliment by including a Pavane, by William Byrd, in her harpsichord solos.

A choir has been recently established in Manchester, its primary aim being to sing at the chief competition festivals. Entitled the Manchester Oriana Madrigal Society, it is under the direction of Mr. Herbert Whittaker, conductor of the celebrated Blackpool Choir.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society performed Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah' on November 12, and the performance proved to be one of the best the Society has lately given. The band and chorus deserve a special word of praise. The soloists were Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Frederic Austin, who were associated with Mr. Russell, Mr. Charles Keywood and Mr. Downing, all local singers who ably rendered the minor parts. Mr. Allen Gill conducted, and the hearty applause of a full house proved how acceptable was the work to the audience.

A pianoforte and vocal recital of more than usual interest was given on November 23 by Miss Cantelo and Mr. Robert Radford—both highly-esteemed artists of great merit, born and bred in Nottingham. Miss Cantelo, who has done much to introduce music of the highest class into the city, was heard to advantage in works by Brahms, Chopin, Grieg, and Lizzt, but charmed especially in her dainty performance of a minuet by Merikanto. Mr. Radford, who is always enthusiastically received in his native city, sang various songs, including some Ulster and Dorset folk-songs, in which he specially distinguished himself.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The handsome new Victoria Hall, built by the Wesleyan community of this city, has already become a centre of religious musical activity. A number of excellent popular Saturday night concerts have proved that in comfort and acoustics the new building, seating 2,000 persons, makes an excellent concert hall. On November 15 its capabilities were more extensively tested by a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The choir numbered 350 voices, and the Mission orchestra, led by Mr. C. Hawcroft, played admirably in the symphony and accompaniments. The soloists were Miss Ethel Bird, Miss C. Church and Mr. J. A. Hinde. Mr. H. Chisholm Jackson, who conducted, is about to organize a large choir, to be called the Victoria Hall Choral Society.

The remainder of last month's choral activity was almost entirely devoted to performances of sacred cantatas, &c., at various places of worship holding choral and dedication festivals. Among these may be mentioned 'The Messiah,' at Brunswick Chapel, and the production of Mr. C. Jessop's new cantata 'The Galilean,' at Glossop Road Baptist Church. Mr. Jessop's melodious and easy work was admirably sung under the direction of the composer.

At the second concert of the Sheffield Chamber Music Society, Mr. Leonard Borwick gave an enjoyable pianoforte LEEDS.

MR. HOLBROOKE'S DRAMATIC CHORAL SYMPHONY.

Quite the most interesting event in Leeds music up to now has been the first performance (as a whole) of Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's 'Homage to E. A. Poe,' a work which he has written for the Leeds Choral Union, and styles a Dramatic Choral Symphony. It is, in effect, a series of four of Poe's poems, set for orchestra, chorus, and a quartet of principals (Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Effie Martyn, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. C. Knowles). Mr. Holbrooke has always shown himself in close sympathy with Poe's fantastic imaginings, and he is quite in his happiest vein in interpreting the weird pictures called forth by 'The haunted palace,' or 'The city in the sea,' or 'The Valley Nis'—which are the subjects of the first, third, and fourth sections of the work, a simple and colourless 'Hymn' to the Virgin Mary forming the second, and serving the purpose of relief. The orthodox will certainly look askance at many pages in this elaborate and highly-coloured score, but on the whole one feels one may do the composer the justice of assuming that the music, wild as it sometimes sounds, is a genuine expression of the impressions which Poe's words—themselves often vague, yet strongly suggestive in character-have made upon his own vivid imagination. The picture of the grim Palace of King Death in 'The city in the sea' is undoubtedly a creation which may be styled great, in spite of its extravagance, and there are throughout many passages of a fearsome beauty. In one respect the composer does himself an injustice, for he makes the realisation of his ideas so difficult that only the ear of faith can credit them, and one feels that a certain degree of practicability might have been attained without sacrificing any material effects. The efficiency of the local chorus and orchestra was very severely tested by the performance, and though many details, more particularly in the orchestration, did not come out clearly, the way in which all stuck to their parts was most creditable. Mr. Holbrooke conducted. He is not as yet a complete master of the baton, but he showed more control of his forces than he used to do not so long ago. The second part of the concert consisted of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' conducted by Mr. Farrer Briggs, in place of Dr. Coward, who was then on his Canadian tour.

The joint Philharmonic and Subscription Concerts opened on November 4 with a performance of 'St. Paul,' designed no doubt by way of a contribution to the approaching Mendelssohn centenary, just as is the Choral Union's proposed performance of 'Elijah' in December. The chorus, which has been 'weeded' since last season, sang with great refinement and beauty of tone-quality, the blend being excellent, and the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, which is practically the Municipal Orchestra under another name, and denuded of its lady-members, proved so much more than equal to its task that we can now look forward to a time when Leeds need not, save on special occasions, go beyond its own borders for orchestral help. The principals were Miss Lily Wormald, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Joseph Lycett, and Sir Charles Stanford conducted.

The Municipal Concerts are again to be ten in number, and already three have taken place. The first was one of the Wagner programmes which have grown inevitable since it has been found that nothing else attracts such a crowd. This was on October 17, and at the next concert, on October 31, Mozart's 'Haffner' symphony received a delightfully bright interpretation, while Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte concerto (soloist, Mr. Percy Richardson) was most sympathetically played. Elgar's first 'Wand of Youth' Suite was introduced to Leeds on this occasion, and the dainty, tuneful music made an excellent impression. Miss On November 14 we had Grainger Kerr was the vocalist. three interesting examples of Beethoven: the first Symphony, the 'King Stephen' overture, and the three Equali for four trombones which accompanied the composer's own funeral procession. Weber's Concertstück, the solo brilliantly played by Mr. Frederick Ellis, the 'Frühlingslied' of the solo brilliantly played by Mr. Frederick Ellis, the 'Frühlingslied' of the solo brilliantly played by Mr. Frederick Ellis, the 'Frühlingslied' of the solo brilliantly brillia a programme rather more conservative than usual.

Mr. Fricker, who may claim to be the founder of these concerts, was the conductor on these occasions, and it is a proof of the 'correct' official view taken of them that they are now under the ægis of the Education Committee of the Town Council.

The Messrs. Haddock's 'Musical Evenings' promise this season to be of some artistic worth, since they afford the opportunity of hearing a succession of first-rate instrumentalists, of whom Busoni and Miss Marie Hall have already made their appearance. On one evening a series of Dvorák pieces are to be played by Mr. Willibald Richter and Mr. E. Haddock.

In chamber music Leeds will be well supplied, three string quartet parties being in the field. The comparatively old-established Leeds Bohemian Concerts began on November 11, when quartets by Haydn (the 'Emperor'), Beethoven (in F, Op. 18, No. 1), and Schubert (A minor) were heard. The Rasch Quartet opened its campaign on October 28; in addition to Brahms's C minor Quartet and a Haydn Quartet, a novelty was introduced in the shape of the jeu d'esprit which ten Russian composers indulged in, by co-operating in a set of variations on a popular melody. Lastly, the ladies have asserted themselves, and a string quartet of lady instrumentalists, of which Miss Alice Simpkin, an accomplished Leeds violinist, is leader, gave a concert on December 18, when Beethoven's first Quartet and Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat were played with much sympathy and finish.

A pianoforte recital by a refined young artist, Mr. Lloyd Hartley, which took place on November 10, deserves mention, as does the first appearance at Leeds of the New Symphony Orchestra, with Kubelik as solo violinist, on November 19. From the above brief enumeration of a month's Leeds concerts it will be seen that a rather rapid pace has been set; if it can be sustained we shall certainly have a busy season to record.

BRADFORD.

At Bradford the Subscription Concerts began well on October 30, when an admirable, if overloaded, programme of orchestral music was given under Dr. Richter's direction. Beethoven's seventh Symphony and Brahms's Violin concerto made a sufficiently gargantuan Part I., and when it was followed by a second part of somewhat lighter calibre, yet of great artistic interest, it will be acknowledged that there was a superabundance of riches. Mr. Fritz Kreisler, the solo violinist, was in excellent form; in Brahms as well as in Beethoven he seems to be Joachim's legitimate successor among all living violinists. On October 24 the Bradford Permanent Orchestra, of which Mr. Allen Gill is the conductor, gave the first of its concerts. The programme was chiefly of Wagner pieces, but Spohr's Dramatic Concerto (soloist, Mr. John Dunn) was a prominent feature in it. The Bradford Festival Choral Society also turned to Wagner for its first concert, on November 6, the second act of 'Tannhäuser' and the final scene from 'Die Meistersinger' forming the programme. The more prominent solo parts were taken by Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Walter Wheatley, Mr. Radford (an admirable Landgrave), Mr. Uttley and Mr. W. Thornton. Dr. Cowen conducted a generally satisfactory performance. Miss Friedman, a clever young violinist, made her professional début at a recital she gave on October 21.

OTHER TOWNS.

At Huddersfield the Choral Society chose for its first concert on October 23 Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' of which good if not inspired performances were given. The soloists, whose chance of vocal distinction came in Rossini's florid music, were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Heather and Mr. Thorpe Bates. Mr. Ibeson, in the absence of Dr. Coward, conducted. On November 3, a newly-formed string quartet party, of which Mr. Kaye is the leader, gave a concert at which they played quartets by Mendelssohn (in D, Op. 44) and Schubert (in E flat, Op. 125), and, with the help of Mr. J. W. Pearce as pianist, Dvorák's fine Quintet. Though as yet somewhat rough, they showed enthusiasm, and ease and refinement will come as they grow accustomed to play together.

The Halisax Orchestral Society gave, at its first concert on November 5, Mozart's well-known E flat Symphony, of which a performance very creditable for a band that is chiefly amateur in its composition was secured under Mr. Van Dyk's direction. The formal but brilliant 'Anacreon' overture of Cherubini was very enjoyable, as was, in a very different vein, Dvorák's naïve and charming Suite in D. On November 19 the Halifax Choral Society, under Mr. F. de G. English, gave Brahms's 'German Requiem,' with Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. F. Harford as principals, and, in the second part, Rutland Boughton's brilliant and effective Variations on a Folk-song, for unaccompanied chorus, which proved so interesting a feature of the last Leeds Festival.

The Hull Harmonic Society chose for its concert on November 13 the first and second of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from Hiawatha,' which proved thoroughly well suited to them. The choir is not a particularly strong one, but it has enthusiasm, and sang with much point under Mr. W. Porter's direction. The soloists were Miss Christine Bywater, Mr. Harold Wild and Mr. Robert Chignell. On November 18 the Hull Symphony Orchestral Society, whose financial career has been more chequered than its artistic success, gave the first of eight afternoon concerts. Mr. Wallerstein, an enthusiastic and able conductor, secured forceful readings of the 'Unfinished' Symphony, Saint-Saëns's 'Algerian' Suite, and a set of agreeable Waltzes by Schubert, for string orchestra.

The York Symphony Orchestra's season began on November 9, when a capital performance was given of Saint-Saëns's G minor Pianoforte concerto, Mr. Leonard Borwick playing the solo with power and grip, and the orchestra accompanying most delicately and sympathetically. The strings, a large proportion of whom are ladies, played Grieg's 'Holberg' suite very nicely, testifying to the care and thoroughness of Mr. Noble's drilling.

AMSTERDAM.

Eugen D'Albert's 'Tiefland'—which is by far the most successful opera produced in Germany within recent years, with the single exception of R. Strauss's 'Salome'—was performed here for the first time on October 23, under the direction of Herr Otto Lohse, of the Cologne Opera. On the following day the work was performed with the same cast, under the same conductor, at Rotterdam, and on October 26 at the Hague. It seems strange that so successful a work by a British composer should still be waiting for a hearing in the land of his birth.

BAMBERG.

'The seven last words of Christ on the Cross,' a new oratorio by Dr. P. Hartmann, was produced here in St. Michael's Church on October 11, under the direction of Herr P. Lutz. A deeply-felt setting of the 'Stabat Mater' and an imposing final chorus were especially admired.

BAYREUTH.

It has already been decided to hold a festival next year, when 'Parsifal,' 'The Ring,' and 'Lohengrin' will be performed. The dates are, 'Lohengrin,' July 22, August 1, 5, and 17; 'Parsifal,' July 23 and 31, August 4, 7, 8, 11 and 20; 'The Ring,' July 25 to 28, and August 14 to 17.

BERLIN.

A new Violin concerto in B minor, by a lady composer, Elisabeth Kuyper, was produced on November 10 at one of the Popular concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra. The solo part was played by Konzertmeister Anton Witek. Without showing any marked originality, the work is so beautifully written and sounds so well throughout, that the audience were charmed with it.—Felix Woyrsch's new Symphony in C minor (Op. 52) was played here for the first time on October 19, under Professor Karl Panzner, but failed to make as great an impression as was anticipated from the highly eulogistic reports received after the recent production of the work at Altona.—At the second Philharmonic concert on October 26, under Professor Nikisch, a new Symphony in C sharp minor, by a young Hungarian composer, Anton Bruckner.

Akos von Buttikay, was produced and favourably received. It proved an agreeable, rather than a deep work. Frl. Martha Siebold, at her concert on October 31, given in the Beethoven Saal, introduced under the composer's direction a new Pianoforte concerto, No. 4, in F minor (Op. 82), by Professor Xaver Scharwenka. The hall was crowded with an audience which may, without exaggeration, be said to have included almost every pianist—virtuoso, teacher and student—in Berlin. The work, which was received with tremendous enthusiasm, is sure to become a favourite with pianists able to do justice to its great difficulties, for, while providing an orchestral part of true symphonic importance, the work is a genuine virtuoso concerto. The music is remarkably fresh in invention, and yet it is a generation since the composer wrote his first concerto, the famous work in B flat minor.—At the fifth of his series of organ recitals in the Emperor William Memorial Church, Herr Walter Fischer introduced, among other modern works, a Passacaglia on the scale of A flat minor, by Paul Ertel. The work contains no fewer than sixty-three variations on the short phrase of eight notes, while in the final fugue several old chorales are worked in combination with the fugal subject. The sixth and last recital was devoted to only one piece—viz., Max Reger's Introduction, Variations and Fugue on an original Theme (Op. 73). This piece, of gigantic proportions, is doubtless one of the most extraordinary works ever composed for the king of instruments. ---- Madame Kirkby Lunn gave a vocal recital in the Singakademie on November 5, when her songs covered many and varied styles, and she was equally successful in all. Mr. Percy Pitt was the accompanist.—

M. Claude Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande' has been added to the répertoire of the Komische Oper, a circumstance which naturally gives the critics and the general public plenty of food for thought and opportunity for discussion. It is hardly to be expected that so revolutionary a work should be received with genuine enthusiasm, and Berliners extended to it a welcome which differed in no essential from that which greeted it at Cologne, Frankfort-on-Main, Munich and Prague, viz.: expectant curiosity changing towards the end into something like appreciation. The performance, conducted by Kapellmeister Alex. Birnbaum, was in many respects deserving of the highest praise. The orchestra respects deserving of the highest praise. The orchestra might have played with even more refinement, to do perfect justice to the composer's ever-shifting and most subtle progressions; but on the other hand the stage management -for which the director of the Komische Oper, Herr Hans Gregor, was responsible—was poetic and suggestive in the rarest degree. In connection with the highly-interesting event, Herr Gregor had arranged for a lecture by Dr. Otto Neitzel, to which those who had purchased tickets for the performance were admitted free of charge. Herr Kapellmeister Birnbaum played excerpts from the score on a pianoforte, a proceeding which seems likely to have defeated the very object Herr Gregor had in view, for if there exists a work which absolutely demands that it be heard exactly as the composer conceived it--i.e., with the orchestra—it is this much-discussed and much-denounced 'drame lyrique' of M. Debussy.

BREMEN.

Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations were played here for the first time at the second Philharmonic concert on November 4, and most favourably received. Professor Karl Panzner secured a superb performance. Critics of the local Press place the work amongst the very finest of its class.

COLOGNE.

Eugen D'Albert's latest opera 'Tragaldabas' was recently performed here for the first time at the Municipal Opera House, and scored a genuine success. The composer, who was present, was the recipient of many flattering ovations.

DARMSTADT.

'Narciss Rameau,' a new opera by Julius Stern, was very successfully produced at the Court Theatre on October 23. The libretto is based upon a play of the same title by Brachvogel, which has for many years enjoyed considerable popularity in Germany. The composer is a pupil of Anton Bruckner.

DRESDEN.

Tchaikovsky's opera 'Eugene Onegin' was, on October 20, added to the répertoire of the Royal Opera and achieved a triumphant success. The performance, conducted by Generalmusikdirektor von Schuch, was in every way worthy of the work and of the great reputation which the Dresden opera enjoys.—A new 'Heroic' Symphony in C major, by the Swiss composer, Professor Hans Huber, was produced here at the second symphony concert of the Royal Orchestra on November 8, and received with much favour. The composer has not given any clue as to a possible 'programme,' except that he calls the two middle movements 'Funeral March' and 'Dance of Death' respectively. A soprano solo is introduced towards the end of the work, and heightens the effect of a generally impressive Finale.

HAMBURG.

'Versiegelt' (Sealed up), a one-act opera by Leo Blech, was produced on November 4 at the local Municipal Theatre with emphatic success. As regards both libretto and music this new musical comedy was voted excellent beyond the common. The work will shortly be given at the Berlin Royal Opera, where Herr Blech is one of the conductors.

LEIPZIG.

At the fourth Gewandhaus concert, Elgar's exquisite part-song 'My love dwelt in a northern land' (called 'Romanze' in the German version) was sung by the choir of St. Thomas Church, under the direction of Professor Gustav Schreck, and made a deep impression. The performance of this and other beautiful part-songs of Dvorák, César Cui, and A. Gretchaninov was perfect. Prof. Arthur Nikisch conducted a Symphony in D by Haydn, and Beethoven's 'Pastoral.'

MAYENCE.

A new Symphony, in B minor, by Prof. Dr. Fritz Volbach, of Tübingen, was produced here at the second Symphony concert of the Municipal Orchestra on October 21. The work met with an enthusiastic reception, its fresh and piquant, intermezzo-like Scherzo having to be repeated in response to the plaudits of the audience. The Finale, built upon an old 'Hallelujah' theme, works up to a very powerful peroration. This symphony, which seems a genuine addition to the literature of the great art-form, is to be published by Messrs. Hug & Co., of Leipzig and Zürich.

MUNICH.

The Konzertverein gave in the Tonhalle, under the direction of Dr. Ferdinand Löwe, on November 16, a fine performance of Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings. The work was magnificently played and enthusiastically received.

PARIS.

Wagner's 'Götterdämmerung' was added to the répertoire of the Grand Opéra on October 23, only thirty-two years after its production at Bayreuth in 1876! The performance, under the direction of M. André Messager, was worthy of the great work, the orchestra, chorus and stage management being well-nigh perfect. M. Van Dyck was the Siegfried, Mile. Grandjean the Brünnhilde and M. Delmas the Hagen. The work was given without cuts, the performance commencing at 6 o'clock and finishing at 12.15. That Parisians are not slow to avail themselves of this opportunity of making the acquaintance of one of the world's greatest masterpieces was shown at the second performance, when the box office receipts amounted to 23,146 francs, a record for the Grand Opéra. Even during the time of the last great Exhibition the highest figure recorded was only 22,800 francs.——At a general meeting of the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire, on October 26, M. André Messager was unanimously elected conductor of these famous concerts, in succession to the recently-deceased Georges Marty.

ST. PETERSBURG.

'Solotoi Petushok' (The golden cockerel), the last work of the recently-deceased Nicholas Rimsky-Korsakov, was to have been produced here during the current season. The censor has, however, prohibited the performance, and naturally there is much speculation as to what dreadful things a work with such a harmless title may contain to SONDERSHAUSEN.

Herr H. G. Noren's 'Kaleidoskop' variations for orchestra were recently played here under the direction of Herr Traugott Ochs, and enthusiastically received. The event deserves to be recorded, because this was the first performance since the production of the work at Dresden in the summer of 1907, after which the publishers of Richard Strauss's 'Heldenleben' laid an embargo on further performances, as stated in our last issue.

STUTTGART.

At his second subscription concert, Prof. Max Schillings performed Mr. Frederick Delius's 'Appalachia' variations. The extraordinary work was received with much favour.

UPSALA.

Max Bruch's oratorio 'Gustavus Adolphus' was performed here for the first time on November 6, the anniversary of the battle of Lützen in the Thirty Years' War, at which Sweden's famous king lost his life. The part of the king was sung by Mr. Forssell, the finest singer of the famous Upsala Students' Choir.

At the meeting of the Girls' School Music Union, held in the Concert Hall of the Royal College of Music on November 21, Mrs. Newmarch read an interesting paper on 'Russian music, with special reference to the art-songs of Russia.' Mrs. Moberley Bell took the chair, and Mrs. Henry J. Wood, accompanied by Mr. Wood, sang with her wonted charm a large number of Russian songs by various composers in dilustration of the lecturer's remarks. Before the members dispersed, Mr. Percy A. Scholes made an appeal for the support of the Home Music Study Union, a society formed for the purpose of helping its members to perform or to listen to music intelligently, and to band together those who believe in the moral and intellectual influence of music.

Mr. Viggo Kihl, the Danish pianist, gave a most interesting recital at Victoria Hall, Ealing, on November 10. His programme included the Waldstein' Sonata, and pieces by Saint-Saëns, Bach, Mozart, Schubert, Mendelssohn and Chopin. Mr. Kihl excels as a Chopin player, and his fine performance of the great A flat Polonaise was so well received that he had to give in addition the Polonaise in E, by Liszt. Mr. Kihl was assisted by Miss Elaine Birch, who possesses a soprano voice of beautiful quality.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society opened its thirteenth season at the Crystal Palace on Saturday, October 31, with a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' preceded by the same composer's overture 'In Memoriam.' The solo vocalists were Miss Esta d'Argo, Miss Dorothy Fagge, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs, Mr. Frank Cutler and Mr. Robert Burnett. Mr. Arthur Fagge, who was in his accustomed place as conductor, obtained an excellent rendering of Sullivan's popular work. Mr. C. H. Kempling was at the organ.

The engagement of Madame Albani to sing at a number of Variety Theatres—her first appearance having been arranged for Blackpool on November 30—is a remarkable instance of the improvement in the public taste at these entertainments. There can be no doubt that the selection of music with which the distinguished artist will appeal to her audiences will tend to the further elevation of those who frequent the Variety Theatre.

The two Scholarships known as the 'S. Ernest Palmer Music Scholarships,' and founded by the Worshipful Company of Musicians at the Guildhall School of Music, are again open to competition. The next examination will be held at the Guildhall School on January 12, and applications and inquiries on the subject should be addressed to the Clerk of the Musicians' Company, 16, Berners Street, W.

Sir Homewood Crawford, in presiding at the annual meeting of the Westminster Orchestral Society (founded in 1885), referred to the increased membership of the band and the splendid prospects which the present season afforded. The honorary conductor of the Society is Mr. Lennox Clayton, and Mr. H. P. Noakes, 11, Queen's Mansions, Brook Green, is the honorary secretary.

Sir Edward Elgar's new symphony is to be produced at Manchester on December 3, and performed for the first time in London at Queen's Hall, on December 7. Dr. Richter, to whom the work is dedicated, will conduct on both occasions.

receipt of Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.'s ' Professional Pocket Book, or daily and hourly engagement for 1909' is a reminder that the year 1908 is on the wane, and that this useful publication is invaluable to professional Need anything more be said? musicians.

Mr. T. R. Croger delivered a lecture, with musical illustrations, at the Westminster Chapel Literary and Social Guild, on November 7. This Guild, one of the largest in London, has two hundred members.

'Music-printing in Dublin from 1700 to 1750' is the title of a paper read by Dr. W. H. Grattan Flood before the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland, and printed in their Journal of September, 1908 (pp. 236-240).

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents.
Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

ALTRINCHAM. - The Altrincham Orchestral Society, combined with the Eccles Choral Society, gave a concert at the Literary Institute on October 28 in aid of the Altrincham Hospital. The principal feature of the programme was Sir Frederick Bridge's cantata 'Callirhoe,' which had the advantage of being conducted by the composer. The choir had been well trained by its conductor, Mr. F. W. Lane, and the orchestra, whose conductor is Mr. C. H. Fogg, was fairly efficient. The solo vocalists were Madame Sadler-Fogg, Miss Louie Darbyshire and Mr. Wentworth Minty.

BRIGHTON.—The Sacred Harmonic Society opened its eighty-second season on October 29 with Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The choir sang with much power and effect, and the orchestra did excellent work, especially in the symphony to the latter work. Miss Edith Kirkwood, Miss Ethel Dyer, Mr. Braxton Smith and Mr. Montague Borwell were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Robert Taylor was, as usual, an able and enthusiastic conductor.

CHICHESTER.—The seventh concert of the Orchestral Society was held at the Corn Exchange on November 12, under the able conductorship of Mr. F. J. W. Crowe. The programme included Gounod's ballet music from 'Philémon et Baucis,' Minuet from Handel's opera 'Berenice,' the Prelude to Act 3 of 'Lohengrin,' and, as its chief feature, Dvorák's Symphony 'From the new world.' The Countess of March, who is a warm supporter of the Society, played the solo part in the first movement of Schumann's Pianoforte concerto in A minor, and the vocalist was Miss Dora Arnell.

GRIMSBY.—The Orchestral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on November 12, when the programme included the overtures 'Mirella' and 'William Tell,' Liszt's 'Hungarian' Fantasia and Beethoven's Symphony No. 2. The soloists were Miss Irene Scharrer (pianist), Mrs. R. E. Watson (violinist) and Miss Caroline Hatchard (vocalist). The orchestra did excellent work throughout the evening under the able conductorship of Mr. Percy Wilson.

HEBDEN BRIDGE.—The first concert of the season by the Choral and Harmonic Society took place on November 17. Prout's 'Red Cross Knight' was the work selected for this concert, the principal vocalists being Madame Radford, Madame Midgley, Mr. Henry Beaumont, Mr. Bridge Peters and Mr. Norman Allin. Under the capable conductorship of Mr. Walter Williams, the band and chorus gave a very creditable performance.

HERTFORD.—The East Herts Musical Society opened its season on November 19 at the Corn Exchange, under the conductorship of Mr. J. L. Gregory, when Dunhill's ballad for chorus and orchestra, 'Tubal Cain,' and a miscellaneous selection of madrigals and part-songs received excellent interpretations, which clearly betokened much careful preparation. The orchestra was heard alone in the first movement of Beethoven's Symphony, No. 1, and a couple of lighter pieces. Vocal solos by Miss K. Longland and Mr. Fred. Norcup, and horn solos by Mr. O. Borsdorf completed the programme.

ILFORD.—A concert lecture entitled 'An evening with Sullivan' was given by Mr. Walter J. Walls in the Lecture Hall on November 16, when a number of interesting vocal examples of that composer's music were sung, including the part-songs 'The long day closes' and the 'Beleaguered,' the Evening Hymn and choral Epilogue from the 'Golden Legend,' the last two and several anthems being sung by the Congregational Church choir.

LEAMINGTON.—Stanford's 'Revenge' and a miscellaneous programme were given by the Choral Society in the Winter Hall on November 19. The chorus was well balanced, the voices being of good quality and refined tone. Other choral items were Wagner's 'Spinning song,' Nos. 1 & 3, 'Bavarian Highlands,' and 'As torrents in summer' ('King Olaf'), Elgar. Miss Joan Ashley gave a fine rendering of Brahms's Rhapsodie with male-voice chorus. Miss Florence Dudley, the Society's accompanist, played Gade's Pianoforte trio, with Herr Sück (violin), and Mr. Joseph Owen (violoncello). Mr. H. M. J. Gibbon is to be highly congratulated on the performance.

MARSDEN.-The Glee and Madrigal Society opened its season on November 7 with Cowen's 'St. John's Eve.' The choral singing, under the conductorship of Mr. J. H. Sykes, was commendable, and the orchestra was led by Mr. H. Field. The solo vocalists were Madame Beaumont, Miss Maud Sykes, Mr. F. G. Wheatley and Mr. H. Clayton. Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' was included in the miscellaneous selection which followed the cantata.

OLDHAM.—The Saddleworth Vocal Society opened its season in the Mechanics' Institute on October 31, when Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' received an excellent rendering by the choir, which had been carefully trained by Mr. A. Hudson, who also conducted. The solo vocalists were Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Lilian Dews, Mr. S. Hempsall and Mr. Edgar Coyle. — The Musical Society's first concert and Mr. Edgar Coyle.——The Musical Society's first concert this season was given in the Trinity Hall on November 11, when Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' and a miscellaneous selection, including Eaton Faning's 'Liberty,' and the chorus from Glinka's 'Life for the Czar,' constituted the programme. The choruses in the cantata were well sung by the choir under the conductorship of Mr. Harry Brooks, and the solo vocalists were Miss Emily Cox, Miss Mary Bull, Mr. Joseph Cheetham and Mr. A. Leeming.

WALLINGTON.—Mr. Ernest Austin gave an interesting concert of his own compositions at the Parish Hall on Friday evening, November 6. He was assisted by Miss Grainger-Kerr, and Mr. Frederic Austin (vocalists), Mr. John Saunders (violin), Mr. C. A. Crabbe (violoncello), and Mr. Richard Walthew (pianoforte). Miss Grainger-Kerr's sympathetic voice and artistic perception were shown to sympathetic voice and artistic perception were shown to advantage in several of the concert-giver's songs; while Mr. Frederic Austin sang those allotted to him in his usual finished style. The instrumental items comprised the Trio (No. 2), 'In field and forest' (Op. 15), Music-poem for violin and pianoforte (Op. 29), three Tone-stanzas for pianoforte, Music-poem for pianoforte (No. 3), and Trio (No. 4). The audience fully testified their appreciation both of the performers and the composer. both of the performers and the composer.

WARRINGTON. -Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' formed the main feature of attraction in the Musical Society's concert, given in the Parr Hall on November 12. The singing of the choir was on the whole satisfactory, and the solo parts were sung by Miss Lillie Wormald, Madame Amy Dewhurst, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. William Waite. The orchestra, led by Mr. R. H. Pearson, did excellent service throughout, and the whole performance reflected credit on the conductor, Mr. F. H. Crossley.

Answers to Correspondents.

While we are most anxions to answer questions to the best of our ability, we cannot undertake to send replies by post, nor can we give the names of teachers or concert-agents.

- C. R. H.—Yes, you are quite right, the Rev. John Darwall, vicar of Walsall, 1769-89, was the composer of the tune 'Darwall.' It first appeared in 'Williams's New Universal Psalmodist,' 1770. It is just probable, therefore, that Mr. Darwall composed his well-known tune before he went to Walsall. The late Rev. Henry Parr states that the original MS. gives A as the first note of the melody, but it has alway been printed D. Darwall composed tunes in two parts to the whole of the 150 Psalms, metrical version.
- A. B.—For your lecture on Gounod, try to see M. A. de Bovet's biography of the composer (Sampson Low, 1891); also consult 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' new edition. You might add 'There is a green hill far away' and 'Nazareth' to your list of songs. The 'Ave Maria' on Bach's first Prelude would provide an opportunity for any violinist you could secure, who could also play the violin obbligato in 'All hail, thou dwelling' (Salve! dimora.)

ABERTAWE.—See an article, by Sir John Stainer, on 'Carols, English and Foreign,' in The Musical Times of December, 1901; also an article in the issue of December, 1887. See also the preface to the library edition of Bramley & Stainer's 'Christmas Carols, new and old.' Mr. William Cowan has traced the history of 'Adeste Fideles,' so far as it can at present be traced, in 'The Music of the Church Hymnary' (Henry Frowde).

- V. D.—John Gay wrote only the words of 'The beggars' opera' (1727). The songs were written either to ballad tunes (English, Scotch, and Irish, some of considerable antiquity), or the tunes of the most popular songs of the day. The air 'Cease your funning,' unlike the rest of the songs, is given without an old title in the early editions of the opera, and it has been absurdly claimed as a Welsh melody.
- A. G.—The following pieces will be found suitable as organ voluntaries in connection with a service at which Stainer's 'Crucifixion' is sung: Contemplation (Wheeldon); Communion (Hollins); Offertoire (King Hall); Voluntary, Grave and Andante (Wesley); Three short pieces (Aspiration, Contemplation, Lamentation), and Meditation (Wesl); see also the Lenten Book of the Village Organist.
- H. T. B.—The cathedrals within easy reach of Bournemouth are Salisbury, Winchester and Chichester. Endeavour to get to Wells, if you can—a most charming pile. Illustrated articles on the above cathedrals appeared in the following issues of THE MUSICAL TIMES: February, 1903; November, 1901; February, 1905; and December, 1902. There is no prospect of these articles being issued in book form.
- W. B., JUNR.—The following songs will doubtless prove suitable to your bass voice: 'Might I march through life again,' in F. (Necdham); 'Christmas bells at sea' (Sullivan); 'In the heather, my lads,' in A minor; 'Alone,' in C; and 'An Episode' and 'If all the young maidens,' low key (Löhr); 'The Corporal's ditty,' in E flat (Squire); 'Unbeloved' (Stainer); and 'A lover's garland' (Parry).

PERJOFAR.—(1) Messrs. Breitkopf & Haertel have on sale a variety of photographs of eminent composers at different prices. (2) The Royal Society of Musicians occasionally render help to poor and struggling British musicians who have fallen on bad times, and who are not members of the Society. The honorary treasurer is Dr. W. H. Cummings, Sydcote, Dulwich, S.E.

MUSICUS.—There is no need to enter the copyright of a musical publication unless the copyright is being infringed; in that case an entry is necessary before an action can be brought. In order to secure copyright in America, an entry must be made at Washington before publication.

- N. N.—The Journal of the Folk-Song Society is issued from the office of the Society, 19, Berners Street, W., but only to members. The subject of 'musical training for the Music Halls' is too profound for us to fathom.
- G. M. S.—You will find the names and addresses of conductors of the chief Choral Societes in Ireland by referring to the Musical Directory, published annually by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.

- M. K.—We cannot trace any biographical information concerning Mr. Tipper, organist of Romford Parish Church for seventy years. The fame of this gentleman probably rested with 'Tipper's National Psalmody.'
- A. E. B.—You had better send your Betts violin to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, New Bond Street, for their expert and reliable opinion upon the instrument and its value.
- M. A.—It would be very difficult to say what was 'the piece of music used in the Temple at the blessing of the Priests,' even if our modern notation were able to give the actual sounds.
- G. S.—A portrait of Mr. and Mrs. Joah Bates appeared as one of the supplements to our issue of January, 1905. Thanks for so kindly sending the portrait of Mrs. Knyvett.
- R. E. W.—The semiquaver arpeggios are arabesques to be lightly and quickly played while their semibreve chords are sustained by means of the pedal.
- S. A.—We regret that we cannot trace the song. You might enquire of Mr. Frank Kidson, 5, Hamilton Avenue, Chapeltown Road, Leeds.
- C. E. B. See Coleridge Taylor's 'African Dances,' containing a negro song and a negro dance, published by Messrs. Augener & Co.

ARQUIN.—The 'Annals of the Three Choirs' can be obtained from the publishers, Messrs. Chance & Bland, Gloucester.

- F. L. B.—The semiquaver should come after the last quaver of the triplet in another part (Gloria of Bach's Magnificat).
- F. I. O.—Hopkins & Rimbault's book on the organ is now published by Mr. William Reeves, 83, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

E. B. S .- No.

A. S. writes: 'Seeing in the current number of your journal that a correspondent asks for the source of the hymn beginning "He sitteth o'er the water floods," I have pleasure in saying that it appears in "Hymns and Spiritual Songs for the children of God," published by Messrs. Yapp & Hawkins, London, in 1871. The name of the authoress is Whateley.' A. S. is thanked for kindly supplying this information.

THE

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . .

'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm."

—Birmingham Daily Gasette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."

North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment."—Postypool Free Press.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

NEW CATHEDRAL PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

CGSMO GORDON LANG, D.D.

(ARCHBISHOP-DESIGNATE OF YORK).

CHARLES H. LLOYD, M.A., Mus.D.
(Precentor of Eton).

HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, D.Litt. (Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's).

GEORGE C. MARTIN, Mus.D. (Organist of St. Paul's).

No part of the Church Service has received greater attention in recent years than the Psalms, and there is no better test of an organist's or choirmaster's qualifications than the manner in which the choir renders these matchless poems of Holy Writ.

The chief difficulty of Anglican chanting has always been the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant. In the "Cathedral Psalter," issued a generation ago, an endeavour was made to overcome this difficulty by the use of accent marks, and the striking popularity of the book has proved that the method therein adopted, if rightly used, was nearly perfect.

Experience, however, has shown that there was still room for improvement, and it may confidently be asserted that the nearest approach to perfection has been attained in the entirely revised and improved form of the work entitled the "New Cathedral Psalter."

As the result of much careful study and practical knowledge, all ambiguity in regard to the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant has now been removed.

The "New Cathedral Psalter" is issued in three forms: (i.) with Superimposed Notes; (ii.) with Prosody Signs; (iii.) with Varied Type, whereby a choice can be made of the form which may be thought most effectual in securing intelligent and reverent chanting. Moreover, the pointing is in every case identical, so that on such an occasion as a service sung by combined choirs all three books could, if necessary, be used simultaneously.

Not the least important consideration in a pointed psalter is the matter of typography. In the "New Cathedral Psalter" bolder faced types, specially prepared, have been used, the result being greater clearness, while particular attention has been paid to the spacing between the words and lines so as to afford greater facility in reading.

The "New Cathedral Psalter," although founded on the "Cathedral Psalter," is a distinct book, and the two books cannot be used together.

THE MILTON TERCENTENARY.

THE MUSIC TO MILTON'S COMUS

EDITED BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY W. BARCLAY SQUIRE.

THE SELECTION INCLUDES THE ORIGINAL SONGS COMPOSED BY HENRY LAWES, TOGETHER WITH INCIDENTAL MUSIC, DANCES, Etc., CHOSEN FROM THE WORKS OF WILLIAM LAWES AND OTHER CONTEMPORARY COMPOSERS.

PRICE, PAPER COVERS, OCTAVO, TWO SHILLINGS.

The present edition of Comus not only contains all the five songs composed by Henry Lawes, but Incidental Music—an Overture, Dances, &c.—selected from the works of William Lawes (brother of Henry) and other contemporary composers, John Jenkins, Dr. John Bull, Giles Farnaby, together with a setting of the song "By the rushy-fringed bank," adapted by Sir Frederick Bridge from another song by Henry Lawes; also the complete text of the poem. Three of the songs have been respectively arranged for chorus of four, and of three voices (s.s.a.).

The work can be very effectively performed on a stage without much difficulty. When this is not practicable, the music would form a most interesting portion of a concert programme; in which case the poem, or a part of it, could be recited, or the music given by itself.

An interesting historical introduction has been contributed by Mr. Barclay Squire, and Sir Frederick Bridge furnishes detailed suggestions for the performance of the musical numbers. A portrait of Henry Lawes, from the fine painting in the Music School collection at Oxford, forms a frontispiece to this publication, which makes an appropriate appearance on the eve of the Tercentenary of the great poet's birth, John Milton having entered the world—he was born in a house in Bread Street, Cheapside—on December 9, 1608.

Comus was written by John Milton in the spring of 1634, when he was twenty-five years of age. The poem owed its inception to his intimate friend Henry Lawes, the "tuneful Harry" of the poet's charming sonnet to the distinguished composer. Written to celebrate the appointment of the Earl of Bridgewater as Lord Lieutenant of the counties on the Welsh border and of North and South Wales—a viceregal post similar to the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland—the "Maske," as it was called, received to first performance at Ludlow Castle on Michaelmas night, 1634.

JULES BARBIER AND MICHEL CARRÉ

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

CH. GOUNOD.

A Selection for Concert Performance EDITED AND ARRANGED BY JOHN POINTER.

In this Selection most of the best-known passages of Gounod's masterpiece are comprised. The Soldiers' Chorus, a large part of the Garden Scene, and most of the Kermesse Act have been arranged, together with other excerpts, in such a sequence as to afford the best effect of variety and contrast; and by reason of this treatment the absence of scenery and action is not detrimental, as it is in a concert performance of the whole opera.

Competition Sestival Record

(COMMENCED AUGUST, 1908.)

LONDON FESTIVALS.

THE schedules for the five chief competition festivals to be held in London next Spring are now ready. In the aggregate they portend a remarkable amount of musical activity in which many thousands of competitors will be concerned. We give a brief review of three of the schedules:

STRATFORD AND EAST LONDON.

Various dates, from March 20 to April 3. This oldestablished festival announces a good programme, in the formation of which it is stated that "Much expert advice was sought, and many hours were spent in hearing and examining suggested pieces. Eclectic as to periods and schools of composition, they have yet kept before them a high standard, feeling their responsibility in endeavouring to raise the musical taste of the neighbourhood.'

Fifteen classes for choirs, adult and junior, are scheduled, and besides there are sections for sightsinging, ear-testing, action-songs, and vocal quartets, trios and duets.

In all of the classes for choirs test-pieces are named, but in addition, each choir must sing an own-choice piece. However attractive this plan may be for audiences, it is not one that facilitates the difficult task of adjudicators. In the chief mixed-voice choral class the named piece is Mendelssohn's magnificent "Judge me, O God."

There are fifteen solo-singing classes. None of the tests named present difficulties, but this implies no fault in the selection; yet some critics would like to see the art-song more in evidence. The ballad of to-day we have always with us.

The pianoforte classes are the most striking feature of the syllabus. No fewer than twenty-two classes are scheduled. It is fortunate that in these classes there is "no own-choice piece." But why not, if it is desirable in choral classes? Organists, violinists, violoncellists and clarinettists are all catered for. There are classes for string orchestras, school bands (own-choice piece only this time), elocution and musical composition. Altogether the twenty-four pages of the syllabus are interesting reading and a valuable testimony to the educational character of a well-devised scheme.

There are money prizes—the highest is £3—in every class except the two chief choral classes, in which instead, respectively, a Challenge Shield and a Challenge Cup are offered. Entrance fees have to be paid in every class. Choirs pay seven shillings and sixpence and five shillings, and soloists, instrumental and vocal, five shillings. Eleven adjudicators are announced. The Secretary is Mr. John Graham, 110, Station Road, Chingford, E.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

May, 6, 7, 8.

This is a wonderfully well-organized event, now in its third year. Miss Cecilia Hill is its creator and is still the indefatigable honorary secretary. In a paper she read at the July meeting of the Association of Musical Competition Festivals, Miss Hill calmly remarked on the ease with which a London festival could be started, and she went on to say that there was no credit in being jolly over starting a London festival. "There were numberless existing organizations that could be made use of-clubs, societies, commercial firms, all willing to named are:-

include musical competitions in their work. There were hundreds of workers ready to hand, experienced in dealing with large numbers of people, trained in parish work, active and self-sacrificing. Then again it was much easier to raise money for subscriptions in London than in the country. It was comparatively easy to get an audience. It was easy to secure good adjudicators. There were good and convenient halls everywhere. One of the chief practical difficulties in the organization of a country festival was that of travelling, arrangements of special trains, &c. This trouble was non-existent in a London competition. All the competitors could walk to the hall. Then, one did not have to cater; competitors could either go home to tea, or secure tea and buns just round the

This is all very well, but when we gaze at the front page of the schedule (17 in. by 9 in.), with its dazzling mass of names of patrons, headed by that of the gracious president (the Marchioness of Salisbury), adjudicators, members of executive committee, general committee, with its representatives in seventy-one named districts, we wonder what Miss Hill would consider to be a more difficult business to arrange. But Miss Hill, of course, has many loyal assistants who are as convinced as she is of the importance of the work being done.

The syllabus enumerates seventeen adult choir sections, six for schools, five for pianoforte solos, seven for vocal solos, and besides these are sections for mixed and male-voice quartets, female-voice trios, string orchestra, string quartet, pianoforte trio, organ solo, and for composition.

In most of the choral classes two pieces and sometimes three pieces are named. In the three chief classes Bach's motet for double chorus, "I wrestle and pray," is put as a third piece, the design being to combine the choirs at an evening concert, which this year is to be conducted by Mr. Allen Gill. There is an open choral class in which the tests, in addition to the motet, are: "Weary wind of the West" (Elgar), and "The surrender of the soul" (Cornelius).

In the chief "close" class the tests are: "The Lady is put as a third piece, the design being to combine the

Oriana" (Wilbye), "My love dwells in a northern land

(Elgar), and the Bach motet.

There are no own-choice pieces and no money prizes, except in the open choral class, in which fro in addition to a silver challenge cup is offered.

KENSINGTON AND WEST LONDON.

March 2, 3, 4, 1909.

This festival has recently enlarged its borders. It now includes Chelsea, Fulham, Hammersmith, Kensington, Paddington, St. Marylebone, St. Pancras, Westminster, and the Brentford, Ealing and Uxbridge Divisions of the County of Middlesex. It may very well be that it will be found difficult to accommodate all the competitions in the Town Hall, Kensington. However, Olympia is not very far away.

The scheme includes choral and orchestral classes, string quartets, string orchestras, and solo singing (mezzo-sopranos and baritones only this year).

There are no money prizes. Bowls, cups, medals and framed certificates are offered. As the festival was first founded to cater only for female-voice choirs, this element is still a strong feature of the programme. The tests

.. Mendelssohn The maybells and the flowers God shall wipe away all tears Field .. Coronach Schubert Fly, singing bird .. . Elgar A litany Hurlstone and all the "afternoon" choirs are asked to learn "The Lord is my Shepherd" (Schubert) for combined performance. The orchestras are to play Schubert's Minuet in D and Grieg's "Two Melodies" (Op. 53).

There are two mixed-voice choir classes, one for new competitors and those who have not before won a first-prize, and an "open" class. "Go, lovely rose" (Gound) is the test for the former class, and Leslie's madrigal "Charm me asleep" is the test for the "open" class. In view of the importance of this class, it would have been well to ask for at least two tests.

An effort was made to organize a children's competition, but some of the teachers who were consulted were against it. Inasmuch as in every other district in London there are school choir and junior choir competitions, it is remarkable that they are not in favour in this quarter. In such a vast district there must be many schools, bands of hope, and other junior choirs perfectly willing to compete. But although there will be no children's competition, there will be instead a children's festival, which it is hoped may have a beneficial educational influence. This festival is restricted to educational influence. schools in the Royal Borough of Kensington and the immediate neighbourhood. A book containing the following songs for the use of the combined choirs, has been specially prepared:—

UNISON.—'' Now is the month of Maying,'' '' Jockey to the fair,'' '' The Mermaid,'' '' The ash grove,'' '' The hundred pipers,'' '' The meeting of the waters,'' '' Early one morning.''

one morning."

Two-Part.—"O lovely peace" (Handel), "The coming of May" (E. Boyce), "Sabbath morn" (Mendelssohn), "Pluck ye roses" (Schumann).

There will also be three-part songs given by the St. Mary Abbott's Boys' School and the Addison Gardens' Mixed School, and solos. The unison songs will be accompanied by the Addison Gardens' School Orchestra, which will also contribute some orchestral pieces. pieces.

The People's Palace (London, E.), and the South London Festivals will be dealt with in our next issue.

NOTTINGHAM.

October 24.

This festival was held on Saturdays, October 17 and 24. The results of the first day were given in the November issue of THE RECORD. On October 24 the competitions were open, and many excellent choirs were attracted. The festival was held in the commodious Mechanics' Hall, an arena specially good for music. It contains an organ, which was found to be of great assistance in the performance of the music by the combined choirs. The chief results were as follows:

SOLO CLASSES.

Pianoforte (under 18): test, "Spinnerlied" (Mendelssohn). Twelve entries; 1st prize, C. F. Gibbs.

Soprano: test, "A summer night" (Goring Thomas).

Fifteen entries; 1st prize, Miss M. A. Ward, who sang with much beauty of voice and depth of expression. had a great reception at the evening concert, at which the song was repeated.

Contralto: test, "Divinités du Styx" (Gluck). Six entries; 1st prize, Miss C. Warner.

The Brass Quartet competition was won by Boots' Plaisaunce.

CHURCH OR CHAPEL CHOIRS (Six entries). Tests: "Lord, for Thy tender mercies sake" (Farrant) and "The rainy day" (Sullivan).

Barnsley Ebenezer. 3rd. South Street, Ilkeston. Borrowash. Albert Hall, Nottingham. 2nd. Matlock.

1st. East Kirkby Baptist.

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (not exceeding thirty voices). Three entries.

Tests: Madrigal "Adieu! sweet Amarillis" (Wilbye) and "Who is Sylvia" (German).

> and, Sheffield Clarion. 3rd. Derby Co-operative.

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (not exceeding fifty voices) Challenge Shield Class. (Six entries.)

Tests: (a) Madrigal, "Fire, fire my heart" (Morley);
(b) "To Mary in Heaven" (Bennett); (c) "Liberty" (Eaton Faning).
Only (a) and (b) were chosen for competition; (c) was reserved for combined performance.

Six choirs competed, in the following order:

4th. Matlock Vocal Society, 135 marks.

1st. Coventry Co-operative, 148 marks.
Nottingham Philharmonic.
2nd. The "William Woolley" Choral Society, 142 marks. 3rd. Kettering Fuller Excelsior, 139 marks.

Nottingham Part-Song Choir.

The singing in the Challenge Shield class had much distinction. It was evident that the art of choir-training had been well studied by all the conductors. Coventry Choir sang with great technical perfection and with moving expression. They have a rich, resonant blend, and their enunciation is clear and not defaced by exaggerated consonants. Mr. Woolley's Choir also sang with much charm and finish. Their rhythmic accent was an attractive speciality. Some more subordination of parts seemed needful, and in "To Mary" the intonation was not perfectly true.

One of the most remarkable features of the festival was the truly magnificent performance of Eaton Faning's dramatic choral ballad "Liberty," by the combined choirs and organ. It says much for the ability of Mr. C. A. Riley, who conducted, that this performance was secured without a united rehearsal, and it is a tribute to the efficiency and conscientiousness of the several conductors and their choralists that they knew this rather difficult piece so thoroughly.

Mr. Frederick Wyatt was the official accompanist.
Dr. McNaught adjudicated. The secretary is Mr. F.
Purdy. All the arrangements worked smoothly under his direction.

KEIGHLEY. October 24, 31.

The competitions held on the first day were to have included a class for male-voice choirs; but only Nelson Arion Glee Union having entered, the competition was cancelled and the choir were engaged to sing at the evening concert. In the soprano solo class the tests were "I will extol Thee, O Lord" (Costa), and "Let the bright Seraphim" (Handel); 1st prize, Miss Ethel Mortimer. In the senior pianoforte class the tests were a movement from Grieg's Sonata in E minor and an Etude by Mendelssohn; 1st prize, Archibald Mozley. Sight-reading competitions were won by Miss Eleanor Rawling (soprano), and Herbert H. Gott (pianoforte).

The Minster Glee Singers (Sheffield) won the male-voice quartet prize, for which the tests were "Go, rose" (Beale), and "Stars of the summer night" (Cruickshank).

On the second day interest centred in the mixed-voice choir competition, in which the test-pieces were "In Autumn" (Brahms) and "O, wild west wind" (Elgar). Six choirs entered, and four were selected to sing the Elgar piece. The results are noted below:

3rd. Bingley Co-operative (Mr. T. H. Salter), 126 marks.

THE WILLESDEN DISTRICT CHOIR.

This choir under Mr. T. S. Waddell has achieved many successes in competitions. Its record should make the most pessimistic Londoner hopeful, and its motto might well be Floreat-Waddell-Willesden. The characteristic qualities of the performance of the choir are clean finish and studied expression. We are glad to hear that they intend to enter for the National Eisteddfod to be held in London next June. This occasion will try the mettle of the choir as probably it has never before been tried, if some of the best small northern choirs are to compete. We trust the best choralists of the district will rally to the support of the organization. The following is the first-prize record of the choir:

Choral.

MR. JOSEPH BENNETT, the well-known critic of the Daily Telegraph, has in a recently-issued volume At the evening concert, at which the prize-winners given the world some of his reminiscences. He has performed, the whole cantata was very successfully given often adjudicated at Welsh Eisteddfodau, and in this connection relates the following story of Sir George Macfarren's experience, as an adjudicator, at a Cardiff Eisteddfod in 1883, when, in the middle of a choral competition, according to immemorial custom a gentleman began to make a speech on some other topic just to vary the proceedings. Mr. Bennett says:

Macfarren and the other adjudicators, of whom I was one, were sitting in a group at the back of the platform. I was, of course, near enough to watch our chief's face. He was unaccustomed to Eisteddfodic vagaries, which are always plentiful and sometimes startling. At first his expression was one of blank surprise, but when he grasped the situation and saw that the competition was grasped the situation and saw that the state of the likely to be much delayed, indignation flushed his face, cried out "Go on and he suddenly, in harsh tones, cried out: "Go on with the competition. This is most indecent. If you do not proceed with the competition, the adjudicators will retire in a body." Then again he exclaimed, now literally foaming at the mouth, "Go on with the competition!" Some of the huge audience, not having the fear of front-bench magnates before their eyes, began to applaud, and the orator, perhaps prompted by the chairman, sat down; the interruption ceased; the competition was resumed, and slowly the chief adjudicator's countenance put on its normal appearance. The Celtic audience probably found nothing surprising in Macfarren's outburst of Celtic passion.
